Credit Curb Is Promised Roosevelt by Auto Leaders

High-Pressure Sales Revision Pledged Also to President.

Session Is Held At White House

They Feel Spring Trade Will Bring Boost to Other Fields.

On the Business Front.

Leaders of the automobile industry, at a conference with President Roosevelt, agreed to revise easy credit and high pressure salesmanship policies.

William O. Douglas, chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, revealed that the Government was considering use of Federal funds to provide credit for small companies or to purchase shares of growing firms unable to obtain capital through ordinary channels.—Page 2.

Auto Leaders Optimistic.

By the United Press

High executives of the automobile industry agreed at a conference with President Roosevelt yesterday to revise sharply their easy credit and high pressure salesmanship policies. They reported an expected increase in motor sales this spring would improve business generally.

The motor leaders spent 90 minutes with Mr. Roosevelt, discussing every phase of his contention that the current trade recession was heightened by unbalanced production, too lenient credit arrangements and tactics employed by salesmen which resulted in an "over-sold" market for industrial wares.

On Holding Companies.

Earlier, at a press conference, Mr. Roosevelt sought to clarify his views on holding companies and prices. He explained that when he asked reporters two week ago, "Why have any holding companies?" he actually was referring to a ban on these units in the utilities industry and in banking, not in all industry as was interpreted.

For example, he said, he would not outlaw management companies of industrial enterprises, such as the Pennsylvania Railroad, which operates as a unit through many States. He conceded at his conference with 50 business and industrial leaders Wednesday that some holding companies produced mass efficiency and thus operated in the public interest.

Mr. Roosevelt refuted editorial criticism that his price policies were moving in opposite directions. The New Deal objective, he explained, is still the restoration of prices to their 1926 level. Prices of today average only 69 if those of 1926 are pegged at 100. He said he was seeking to lower only those prices which shot up too rapidly

Jury Ponders Oil Price-Fixing Case

Madison, Wis., Jan. 21 (AP).—Middle-aged farmers and small-town business men retired late today to deliberate the case of 16 oil companies and 30 of their officials charged with conspiring to violate the Sherman act through gasoline price fixing.

Fines and imprisonment confront the defendants if they are convicted in the biggest antitrust action involving the petroleum industry since the dissolution of the Standard Oil trust. The maximum penalty is a $5,000 fine or a year's imprisonment, or both.

Deputies Vote Support, 501-1, To Chautemps

By the Associated Press.

Paris, Jan. 21.—Conservatives united with the People's Front parties in the Chamber of Deputies today to give the new Radical-Socialist government of Premier Camille Chautemps its first pledge of confidence by a vote of 501 to 1.

The vote came after the premier announced a drastic reorganization of France's national defense on a virtually wartime basis and pledged his new government to defend the franc and carry out the People's Front program of social reform.

The deputies shouted approval as Chautemps read his cabinet's declaration of policy and asked the formal vote of confidence.

Conservatives as well as Socialists and Communists made no promises, however, that their support would continue. Chautemps himself said he accepted the possibility his government might be only "a transition ministry."

The ministerial declaration of policy also drew majority applause in the generally more conservative

Potomac Flood Control Plan Approved by Rivers Congress

$1,000,000 Cumberland Project Also Indorsed by Meeting.

Unqualified approval of the proposed $1,000,000 flood control project for Cumberland, Md., and a large portion of the Upper Potomac Valley was given yesterday by the National Rivers and Harbors Congress, concluding its annual convention at the Hotel Mayflower.

The congress also gave "meritorious" rating to plans for controlling the flood menace in Prince Georges County, notably at the Bladensburg Road Peace Cross.

In all the congress, whose president is Representative William J. Driver, of Arkansas, indorsed 99 Public Works projects in every part of the Nation, with an estimated aggregate cost of $573,910,345. Its projects committee, headed by Senator John E. Housing Bill Passes House; Faces Tie-up

Measure Added to List Awaiting Filibuster End in Senate.

The Administration's low cost housing program, shaken loose Thursday from a three-week conference tie-up, was sped through the House yesterday by a voice vote and laid on the Senate's doorstep.

Brief explanations and only one opposition speech served as prelude to passage. But the bill, designed to stimulate home building by offering credit and interest inducements under Federal Housing Administration insurance, still must hurdle a final Senate vote before it goes to the White House for signature.

Minus the Senate's prevailing wage amendment but providing more generous farm building credit terms, the bill will jam up behind the independent offices bill and other Administration measures blockaded by the South's anti-lynching bill filibuster.

Lodge Plans Fight.

A move to displace anti-lynching and consider housing may be made this week. If it succeeds, Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, jr. (Republican), Massachusetts, once more will attempt to insert his amendment guaranteeing prevailing rates of pay to labor employed on the program. His amendment is supported by the American Federation of Labor and building and construction unions.

After a short explanation of the Housing conference report by Chairman Henry B. Steagall, of the House Banking Committee, Representative Jesse P. Wolcott, of Michigan, ranking minority committee member, made the sole House attack on the measure.

Wolcott charged it would "open the door whereby the Federal Government can control home financing."

"This bill," said the Michigan Republican, "will create a situation where a National mortgage association can make loans in competition with every building and loan association, bank and trust company."

U. S. Control Attacked.

Wolcott particularly protested provisions enabling the Government to invest funds in a National mortgage association, declaring it would "place control of real estate financing under organizations subsidized by the United States."

He charged "large amounts of profitable business already had been taken from the banks" and the pending bill would end by putting them entirely out of the real estate mortgage field."

But Wolcott's Republican colleague on the Banking committee,

Hope of Halting Oil Fire Given Up

Wink, Tex., Jan. 21 (U.P.).—A blazing flood of crude oil, throwing black smoke and flame high into the air, spread tonight over the 20-acre Magnolia Valley tank farm, where 800,000 barrels are stored.

Hope of quenching the fire was abandoned when the tank in which it was started by lightning collapsed.

Sam Beard Is Spirited Back to Atlanta Cell

Warring and Two Aides Also Removed; Habitual Criminal Life Sentence Law Suggested; Police Again Are Reinforced.

In the House, Representative Engel (Republican), Michigan, suggested a mandatory life sentence for habitual criminals similar to the Baumes law in New York. He said crimes to which the law would be applicable should be specified to avoid any repetition of the "life-for-a-pint" sentence under the Jones five-and-ten liquor law.

Acting United States Attorney David A. Pine warned criminals of speedy retribution when he set the trial of Ellis Tippett, 20, "drunk bandit," who pleaded not guilty in United States District Court yesterday to nine indictments. Tippett's brother, Ellsworth, 17, pleaded guilty.

Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, returned 105 day patrolmen to night duty for the fourth consecutive night. He said he was pleased with results of the plan so far, though it imposes a hardship on policemen.

Anders' Effort To Escape U. S. Sleuths Bared

Kidnaper and Slayer of 2 Slugged F. B. I. Man in Woods.

By the Associated Press.

St. Paul, Jan. 21.—Federal agents today tightened their evidence to lead Peter Anders to the electric chair for kidnaping and killing Charles S. Ross.

Beaten down when he tried to escape from J. Edgar Hoover and his aides late yesterday, Anders was closely guarded while Government men corroborated his confession.

Hoover tonight described Anders as "the most cold-blooded, ruthless and atrocious killer" ever encountered by the bureau.

Hoover said the swarthy 30-year-old former lumberjack who was arrested near Los Angeles last Friday was a man of "vicious moods," who executed the kidnaping on a savage impulse of the moment.

Anders and his ally in the deed, James Atwood Gray, 20, who was slain by the confessed killer along with Ross, intended to commit a robbery in Chicago the night of September 25.

"Anders told us that instead he felt the impulse to kidnap," Hoover said, "and the crime was quickly perpetrated on Ross whom the men had been watching for some time."

Hoover disclosed Anders made a futile break for freedom from the Federal agent to whom he was chained after the bodies of Ross and Gray were located Thursday in a shallow dug-out grave in wild brush land near Spooner, Wis.

Half of $300,000,000 For Housing Earmarked

By the Associated Press.

Half the $300,000,000 which Congress has made immediately available for slum clearance and low-cost home construction has now been earmarked for specific programs, the United States Housing Authority announced yesterday.

Earmarkings, made yesterday afternoon, were $9,000,000 for Boston, Mass.; $1,800,000 for Allegheny County, Pa.; $1,250,000 for Chester, Pa., and $300,000 for Johnson City, Tenn.

Stitely Draws 6 to 12 Years In CCC Fraud

$36,000 Fine Also Imposed Upon Parks Clerk for $84,000 Theft.

Reno F. Stitely, promoter of a "ghost" Civilian Conservation Corps camp in the Shenandoah National Park, was sentenced to from 6 to 12 years and fined $36,000 by Justice Joseph W. Cox in District Court yesterday.

Stitely had pleaded guilty to eight charges of forgery and one of presenting a false pay roll.

As the young and impeccably dressed prisoner was led from the courtroom by deputy marshals, his pretty, red-haired wife burst into tears. Stitely also broke down and wept.

Stole $84,000 in Five Years.

The case attracted extraordinary attention because of Senate agitation over the fact that the prisoner had gotten away with an estimated $84,000 during five years while chief of the voucher section of the National Park Service.

The fine became a judgment against Stitely's property so that the Government could place liens against Stitely's property so that the affect his sentence, since he can take a "pauper's oath" and be released after a 30-day extension of the term.

Owned Expensive Auto.

Although his salary was only $2,300 a year, the 29-year-old Stitely lived in an attractive home on Cortland place and owned an expensive automobile.

Government investigators said Stitely operated by adding fictitious names to Park Service payrolls. After the rolls had gone through the ordinary channels the checks were returned to him for distribution. Checks drawn for nonexistent employes were indorsed by Stitely and cashed on local banks. He had been employed in the Federal service about nine years.

House Votes Record Navy Peace Budget

A record $553,266,494 peace-time Navy bill, carrying funds for laying down 22 ships and for generally improved naval fighting equipment, passed the House yesterday by a 283-15 standing vote and was messaged to the Senate for hearings.

Passage followed futile efforts by a House peace bloc to scale down warship appropriations, and a heated debate on the relative merits of battleships versus aircraft. Battleships won.

House Appropriations Committee leaders succeeded in holding their draft of the bill intact. It provided $26,723,186 more than this year's appropriations, but $11,139,977 less than the budget bureau estimated.

Another Skirmish Foreseen.

The brisk House skirmish over naval appropriations was a prelude to another that is certain to follow next week when the President, on Monday or Tuesday, gives Congress special recommendations for additional Navy authorizations of possibly between $100,000,000 and $200,000,000.

Before passage of the regular appropriation bill, the House struck out, by a 110 to 83 vote, the only amendment it previously had inserted—a gesture by Representative Byron Scott (Democrat), of California, to suspend promotions and retirements of commissioned officers for the next fiscal year.

Scott withdrew his support from the amendment after promises by Chairman Carl Vinson, of the House Naval Affairs Committee, of hearings next month on proposed reforms in the Navy selection system.

Other Proposals Defeated.

Similarly, every other independent amendment went down to crushing defeat, including proposals to slash warship appropriations and bolster aircraft and to restrict discretion of the Secretary of the Navy in assigning work to private yards. A plan by Representative Hamilton Fish (Republican), of New York, for calling of another Naval limitation conference, was knocked out on a point of order.

The bill provides:

A total of $18,422,100 for starting construction on two new battleships, two cruisers, eight destroyers, six submarines, one minesweeper, one submarine tender, one fleet tug and one oiler.

An appropriation of $119,841,050 for continuing work on 74 ships now under way, including 2 battleships, 3 aircraft carriers, 8

Economic Pact And Indemnity Tokyo's Terms

By the United Press.

Tokyo (Saturday), Jan. 22.—The Japanese Diet (Parliament) convened at 10 a. m. today to hear the statement of Premier Prince Fumimaro Konoye on the state of the empire and the government's plans for continuance of Japan's campaign in China aimed at destroying all resistance of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek's nationalist government.

The premier told members of Parliament the end of the conflict with China was not in sight and he urged a united perseverance by all Japanese to bring about settlement of the undeclared warfare.

Foreign Minister Kohi Hiorta, following the opening address by the premier, announced the terms on which Japan would agree to halt her campaign in east Asia.

The demands included:

Establishment of demilitarized zones in China.

That China pay indemnities to Japan.

China, Hirota said, is "blind to the larger interests in East Asia and is ignoring our magnanimity and Germany's friendly intention." The foreign minister referred to the action of the Chinese government in refusing the peace terms submitted through German diplomats.

China "exhibited no readiness to ask frankly for peace," he continued, "but only sought to delay the matter and ultimately failed to send a reply that could be regarded in any way sincere."

"The nationalist government having thus wilfully thrown away the last chance placed at their disposal by the Japanese government, it became clear that there would be no hope of ever arriving at a solution by waiting indefinitely for reconsideration by the nationalist government.

"Because of those circumstances the Japanese government issued on the 16th a statement that it would henceforth cease to deal with the nationalist government."

TVA Declared Legal Even if It Destroys Private Firms

18 Utilities Lose 'Milestone' Case

Customer 'Allurement' by Low Rates Held Not 'Coercion.'

By the Associated Press.

Chattanooga, Tenn., Jan. 21.—A three-judge Federal court today upheld legality of the Tennessee Valley Authority's power program and declared there was no unlawful competition with private utilities by the TVA.

It added that there was no conspiracy between the TVA and the Public Works Administration, another Government agency, to destroy the complainants' 18 private utility companies, most of them subsidiaries of the Commonwealth and Southern Corporation and Electric Bond and Share Co., operating within 250 miles of TVA dams.

Judge Florence Allen of the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals, Cincinnati, read the decision. Sitting with her were two Federal District Judges, John D. Martin and John J. Gore of Tennessee.

Attorneys for the 18 private utility companies affected by the decision announced tonight it will be appealed to the United States Supreme Court.

Judge Allen said the court found that operation of the Authority's dam at Norris, Tenn., and of other TVA dams under construction or proposed to be built above Muscle Shoals "is clearly constitutional under the national defense powers."

The decision said there was "lawful allurement" of power customers of private utilities by the TVA, a Government agency which has spent more than $150,000,000 in developing the flood control, power and navigation program it began in 1933.

Judge Allen said the "lawful allurement of customers" was by "lawful but substantially lower prices."

State Powers Cited.

The utilities charged the TVA designed high dams to provide power production as well as flood control and navigation and that lower, non-power dams could meet the flood control and navigation program of the TVA.

They contended also that, even though the dams might be constitutional, the Federal Government could not conduct electricity into the Sates and sell it and agree on rates and resale rates because this would violate the police powers of the States.

Fraud, Malice Denied.

Summarizing its ruling, the court said:

"We conclude that, since none of the complainants claims to operate under an exclusive franchise, no fraud, malice, coercion or conspiracy exists; since the authority is not exceeding its statutory powers, and since the statute is Constitutional, the competition with these complainants is lawful.

"It follows that the (Supreme Court) holding in Alabama Power Co. vs. Ickes, supra, recently decided, squarely applies. These complainants have no immunity from lawful competition, even if their business be curtailed or destroyed.

"A decree will be entered denying the injunction sought, dismissing the bill of complainants and

Judge, Wife Live Week on $2 Relief, Ask Congress to Try It

By the Associated Press.

St. Joseph, Mich., Jan. 21.—After relief clients complained they couldn't live on $1.50 a week, with 50 cents extra for each dependent, Probate Judge Malcom Hatfield and his wife tried it themselves. They couldn't either.

Allotting $2 for their food budget last week, the judge and his wife ate oatmeal and condensed milk for breakfast, and for lunch and dinner had vegetables, bread and butter prepared in various ways.

"We blew ourselves for Sunday dinner by eating 15 cents worth of hamburger steak," Judge Hatfield said.

If members of Congress would try such a food budget, the judge wrote in a letter to Vice President Garner, "possibly there would be less filibustering and more action to establish adequate marketing facilities.

Douglas Urges U. S. Credit for Small Firms

Letter to Mead Proposes New 'Mechanism' to Aid Financing.

By Robert C. Albright.

Use of Government funds to provide needed credit for small industrial concerns, or to purchase shares of growing firms unable to obtain capital through ordinary channels, is under serious consideration by the Administration.

Chairman William O. Douglas, of the Securities and Exchange Commission, revealed in a letter to a member of the House that proposals have been under consideration for a Government intermediate credit bank or a Federal mortgage corporation to supply small business credit needs.

Discussing the high cost of small security flotations to little industries needing small amounts of capital, Douglas detailed expenses involved but denied securities act passage was responsible.

Finance Costs Cited.

"The problem of covering the minimum fees and expenses of accountants and lawyers," Douglas said, "has existed at all times.

"If I am correct in this conclusion, it is obvious that in order to satisfy the needs of small corporations for legitimate financing, we must have some new financial mechanism in addition to the existent investment and commercial banking organizations."

His views were outlined in a letter to Chairman James M. Mead, of the House Committee on Postoffices and Post Roads, who had sent to the SEC complaints of a small Buffalo (N. Y.) financier, whose name was not disclosed.

White House Topic.

The Douglas letter coincided with reports that the Government might enter more liberally into the industrial lending business. It presented a possible topic of discussion when the President next week calls in small businessmen for a White House airing of their troubles.

The Buffalo businessman advised Mead of a number of instances in which growing concerns needing money for expansion could not get capital because of prohibitive needs.

Mead's Buffalo correspondent told the story of one concern with $1,500,000 in assets which wanted $400,000 to finance an expansion program to take care of increasing business.

SEC Rules Absolved.

Although the concern had netted a profit every year for the last 30 years and was regarded as a "good risk," it was advised that security issues of less than $1,000,000 were unprofitable to underwriters.

Replying to Mead, Chairman Douglas agreed that cost of security flotations of between $100,000 and $1,000,000 were high, pointing out that handling fees have a minimum below which they are unlikely to fall, even on very small issues.

Douglas wrote Mead that in his opinion the problem of raising capital for small industrial concerns existed prior to the securities act "just as they exist today, and existed in the period 1927-29, when business was presumably prosperous, just as they have existed in depression and recession years."

Heavy Costs Admitted.

"An investment banker naturally incurs certain minimum expenses whenever he handles an issue. Therefore, he can afford to charge only 2 per cent or 3 per cent on the flotation of $10,000,000 or $20,000,000 issues, whereas he must charge 8 per cent or 10 per cent on the flotation of $500,000 or $1,000,000 issues. Not only is it necessary to charge higher fees in order to cover these minimum expenses but there is some reason for believing that it is more difficult to dispose of small issues than larger ones.

"To the extent that larger issues represent financing by substantial and well-known concerns, familiar to the public, security buyers are more ready to invest in them.

Relates RFC Experience.

"On the other hand, when the issuing corporation is small and relatively unknown, the task of selling and distribution is likely to be difficult."

Douglas pointed to the attempt to provide such facilities as an emergency measure in 1934 through amendments to the Reconstruction Finance corporation act and in the Federal Reserve act, but he said these industrial loan operations "have not been of major significance." He said such emergency government loans in 3½ years totaled less than $250,000,000, tapering off in 1937 to insignificant amounts.

"Thus," said Chairman Douglas, "it is possible that something more permanent should be considered. Among other suggestions, we have heard some for a Government intermediate credit bank or a Federal mortgage corporation, both of which presumably would use Government funds to provide credit for or purchase shares of small industrial concerns which are unable to secure their capital requirements either from commercial banks or through the ordinary channels of the capital market."

By Franklyn Waltman

WALTMAN.

Many persons who recognize that installment credit easily may be abused, and that such abuses may lead to serious economic and financial difficulties, nevertheless are perplexed by President Roosevelt's recent activities, designed to tighten up that form of credit in the automobile field.

The, are perplexed because by condemning the easy credit terms on which automobiles have been sold, and in summoning here the leading automobile manufacturers and retail sales financiers, Mr. Roosevelt is engaging in another demonstration of that beautiful inconsistency which he always denies, but which makes him such an interesting figure.

For while Mr. Roosevelt in one breath criticizes automobile sales made on a 24-month installment plan, in the next breath he urges that Congress authorize Federal insurance, backed by all the resources of the Treasury, on mortgage loans up to 90 per cent of the value of a property not in excess of $6,000. Likewise he recommends revival for another two years of insured modernization and repair loans.

There is hardly a man in the building industry or the real estate finance business who would unqualifiedly indorse selling houses on a 10 per cent down payment as a sound undertaking. The most any of them will say in its favor is that with close supervision as to costs such a scheme may work without the Government's losing millions of dollars.

Stewart MacDonald, administrator of the Federal Housing Administration, the agency which must insure these 90 per cent loans, is as good a witness as one could interrogate on this subject. Listen to what Mr. MacDonald told the House Appropriations Committee last month when he appeared to testify regarding appropriations for his agency.

"Do you think that that is good business—to have a man build a home without any more equity than 10 per cent?" asked Representative John M. Houston (Democrat), of Kansas.

"I don't think it is good business; no," replied Mr. MacDonald.

"Do you think that it will create a building boom?" asked Mr. Houston.

"I think it will create a building boom," replied Mr. MacDonald.

"Do you think they will build more low-cost homes?

"I think that if it is confined to the smaller homes under $6,000 it will be quite a stimulant," replied Mr. McDonald, and then added: "There is some risk."

* * *

What Mr. Roosevelt proposes in regard to home financing is held to be bad business and risky by the Administration's foremost authority on that subject and as action which will have the effect of starting "a building boom." But in the automobile field Mr. Roosevelt condemns too-easy financial terms because they create booms with resultant recessions. Is there any consistency here?

But this is not the only reason why the President's apparent drive on installment buying of automobiles causes perplexity. Also mystifying is why Mr. Roosevelt should bring the subject up at this time and said nothing whatever about it a year ago or even last spring before the finance companies of their own volition tightened up such credit.

According to Wilford L. White, chief of the marketing research division of the Commerce Department, in an address before the American Management Association Conference for Financial Executives on December 15, "business men through their trade associations began this last summer to pass resolutions urging their members to shorten the length of their time payment contracts and increase the down payments."

"Among these," he continued, "were the National etail Credit "were the National Retail Credit Association, National Association of Credit Men, National Retail Dry Goods Association and the National Retail Furniture Association . . . The resolutions passed by these leading trade associations, recommending a more conservative policy upon their members, were converted into action, beginning late this summer when large and small sales finance companies, banks and groups of retailers themselves announced shorter terms and larger down payments . . .

"This action, taken late this summer and early this fall, was initiated without any general realization that we were sliding into a recession which for a few industries has been very serious. Some have been so unkind as to say that part of the cause of the slump in automobile sales, for example, has been the tightening of terms."

So that is pretty good evidence that Mr. Roosevelt is going through the motions of shutting the door after the horse was stolen, for Mr. White is the Commerce Department's expert on installment financing and in preparing his address had the assistance of Malcolm L. Merriam, chief of the installment credit unit, recently set up in the Commerce Department.

In order to understand the perplexity created by Mr. Roosevelt's tactics at this time, let us listen a little longer to the December 15 speech of Mr. White:

"Sales policies change from season to season. Those which are considered sound when all business is dull or slowly improving are not necessarily those which bring in cleaner business when conditions are booming or have started sliding off. It has been said that long terms and small down payments are justified at times like 1932, and that shorter terms and larger down payments also are wise at times like those which we faced this summer.

"This simple concept is based upon the fact that when business is sliding off, installment credit sales drop faster than either open credit sales or cash sales and that cash sales decline relatively the least. The facts bear out the idea that the installment buyer is more conservative during these times than either the consumer buying on 30 days' credit or on cash.

"As business evens off or starts up, in order to tempt those out who have purchasing power, longer terms and smaller down payments are good merchandising instruments, assuming, of course that the business man at all times uses good judgment and does not go from one extreme to another."

Mr. White went on to explain that during a period of economic uncertainty "strict terms are essential," but that "when the outlook brightens and business begins to pick up, it would not only be natural but wise to ease off on the terms."

* * *

Beware of some of the alleged facts about the volume of installment buying that comes from New Deal advisers. For instance, Leon Henderson, one of the White House advisers, last April declared that installment credit in 1936 amounted to $9,000,000,000 or, as he put it, "50 per cent more than in the insane days of 1929." His statement was widely circulated and even higher estimates were made—all the way up to $15,000,000,000.

What are the facts? The Bureau of the Census in 1929 estimated the total volume of installment credit extended by reporting retailers at $6,500,000,00. The Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce's estimate for the year 1936 was $4,500,000,000. For the last year the figure was somewhat higher, according to Commerce Department experts.

During the first 11 months of last year the volume of retail automobile financing, based on returns from 282 identical organizations, totalled $1,547,303,709, according to the Census Bureau. The comparable figure for the first 11 months of 1936 was $1,494,993,275, of 1935 it was $1,000,691,733, and of 1929 it was $1,536,454,535. Thus despite contentions of huge increases since 1929, the amount of automobile installment financing this year was not much larger than in that year.

Perhaps a better test of the situation is the total of retail automobile receivables outstanding at the end of various months as reported by 224 identical organizations to the Census Bureau. At the end of January, 1937, this total was $1,027,526,044. At the end of August it was $1,266,953,395 and at the end of November it was $1,172,679,716. Thus, the amount owed on automobiles commenced falling last August.

So what is all the shooting about now? Could it be that this White House questioning of automobile installment sales is but another red herring to distract attention from the real reason for the recession—namely, certain half-baked New Deal policies? We wonder!

League Fate Hangs Upon Eden, Delbos

Geneva, Jan. 21 (AP).—League of Nations quarters tonight declared fate of the League hung on outcome of a talk between British Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden and foreign minister Yvon Delbos of France to be held just before the Council meeting next Wednesday.

The two statesmen were expected to make final plans then on what to do about "punitive" article 16 of the League Covenant, which provided for sanctions or military action against aggressor nations.

The impression at Geneva was that both Eden and Delbos would seek a general understanding that sanctions were dead, although the article would be left in the covenant.

Biggers Warns Of 'Artificial' Recovery Aids

New Slump Due if Economic Engine Is Raced, Job Hearing Is Told.

By the Associated Press.

The Nation, having skidded into a recession, may soon be heading for further trouble by speeding up the economic engine too much, John D. Biggers testified yesterday.

The director of the Federal unemployment census told the Senate Unemployment Committee that if recovery is stimulated by artificial means it may come too rapidly. This, he said, would mean another boom to be followed by another and possibly greater depression.

The Toledo industrial leader recommended establishment of a committee, composed of all elements which have a stake in national employment, to work out a program.

The experience of business after the 1929 crash may have had something to do with the sharp impact of the present recession, Biggers said. He explained that industrial leaders, fearing a return of depression, had curtailed buying at the first hint of a slump in order to "put their houses in order."

There were several factors which acted to increase business fears and contributed to the slump, he added. Not the least of these, he said, was fear of strikes that caused the building up of over-large inventories at excessive prices. The President's announcement last spring that some prices were too high also contributed, he said.

Among other factors, the witness listed curtailment of Government spending in 1937, increase in Federal Reserve requirements, stock market margin increase and sterilization of gold.

Breadline Reward For 'Heroes' Cited

By the Associated Press.

A maritime union leader told the House Merchant Marine Committee yesterday the seamen who rescued more than 700 passengers from the grounded dollar liner President Hoover "now have to go into the breadline for being heroes."

Harry Lundeberg, chairman of the Sailors' Union of the Pacific, said the crew of the liner which went aground in the Orient recently lost most of its belongings and few members had more than $5 apiece when they returned to this country.

"The minute the ship hit," Lundeberg said, "their pay stopped. That's a Federal law. Still they spent more than 36 hours getting the 700 passengers ashore and that's a big job."

Lundeberg told the committee his union was opposed to creation of a Federal mediation board to handle maritime disputes, contending it would mean virtual nullification of the right to strike.

Gen. Brant Shifted To Aviation School

The War Department yesterday announced the transfer of Brig. Gen. Gerald C. Brant, commander of the General Headquarters Air Force at Langley Field, Va., to command of the Air Corps Technical School at Chanute Field, Rantoul, Ill. He will also direct and supervise the Denver, Colo., branch of the technical school.

A native of Chariton, Iowa, Gen. Brant will revert to his permanent rank of colonel when he takes over the Chanute Field post. He will succeed Lieut. Col. Junius W. Jones, of Baton Rouge, La., for whom no new assignment has yet been announced.

Brant's successor at Langley Field has not yet been selected, War Department officials said.

Japan Is 'Plotter,' Citizen Body Told

Japan was branded the carefully plotting aggressor in the present undeclared Sino-Japanese war by Tswen Ling Tsui, second secretary of the Chinese Embassy, in an address before the Glover Park Citizens Association last night.

China, Tsui told the members, who met at the Industrial Home School, has loved peace through the ages, and made every possible concession to Japan before the beginning of hostilities.

"My nation is the embodiment of peace and democracy," said Tsui. "We had dictators for only 40 years out of 4,000 of our history and communism for only a short while."

Postal Inspectors Open Inquiry in Mail Tampering

By the Associated Press.

Postoffice Department officials disclosed yesterday that postal inspectors from Philadelphia and Washington were investigating charges by the American Civil Liberties Union of tampering with mail at Jersey City.

Morris Ernst, counsel for the union, told Chief Postal Inspector Kilroy P. Aldrich that a letter addressed to Syd Rose, chairman of the Hudson County, N. J., committee on civil liberties, was intercepted in Jersey City and photographic copies distributed by an anti-C. I. O. official.

Self-Help Exchange Asks Old Clothing

An "acute shortage" of men's, women's and children's clothing and shoes is causing "a very serious situation in this wet weather," declared Miss Louise O. Beall, executive secretary of the Washington Self-Help Exchange, yesterday.

Asserting that "no matter how worn out the clothes are, we can make use of them," Miss Beall issued a plea for contributions. The articles will be renovated by participants in the exchange, she said, and will be sold for scrip to other workers in the group.

300,000 More Lost Jobs During December

By the Associated Press.

The Labor Department reported yesterday that employment dropped about 300,000 last month under November totals. Weekly pay rolls were down $15,800,000.

The employment decline was the largest for that month since 1920.

In the manufacturing industry, 79 industries out of 89 reported decreases totaling 520,000, with a decrease in weekly pay rolls of $17,600,000. Gains in some other lines partially offset these declines.

Family Firms Levy Attacked As Bad 'Policy'

That Type of Business Should Be Encouraged, Manufacturer Says.

By the Associated Press.

A House tax sub-committee's proposal to place a special levy on family and other closely held corporations drew criticism yesterday from business spokesmen.

H. Boardman Spalding, New York manufacturer representing the National Association of Manufacturers, told the House Ways and Means Committee the tax would place a special burden upon "the very type of business which it would seem to be sound public policy to encourage."

He said also that sub-committee suggestions for modifying the capital gains tax did not go "nearly far enough," but that the sub-committee's tax revision recommendations generally would "be a factor in restoration of business confidence.

Joining Spalding in criticizing the proposed treatment of corporations whose control is centered in a family or a few individuals were Dr. Claudius Murchison, of New York, president of the Cotton Textile Institute, and E. H. Lane, head of the Lane Cedar Chest Co. of Alta Vista, Va.

A provision worked out by the tax sub-committee would compel such firms, after paying a 16 to 20 per cent undistributed profits tax and taking certain deductions, to pay another surtax of 20 per cent on remaining income.

Floridian Proposes 11 Sailor Training Ships

Representative Peterson (Democrat), Florida, asked Congress yesterday to authorize the Navy Secretary to furnish suitable vessels for nautical schools at 11 port cities, including Corpus Christi, Saginaw, Detroit, Baltimore, San Francisco, Seattle, New York, Philadelphia and Boston.

"Trust Camay to give you a lovely Bride Complexion"
SAYS THIS BEAUTIFUL MARYLAND BRIDE

ROCKVILLE, MD.
I always tell my friends to use Camay, because Camay made my own skin clearer, smoother.
Sincerely,
(Signed) DOROTHY DOREY SULLIVAN
(Mrs. Gerard Sullivan)
November 10, 1937

It's glorious to have—it's grand to see—such exhilarating good looks as are Dorothy Sullivan's. Bewitching hazel eyes, a smile like sunshine, a fresh-as-morning complexion are hers. And yours is the good luck to get a behind-the-scenes beauty tip from this lovely bride. "What every girl should know," says she, "is how Camay can help one's complexion."

Are you, too, as wise as this young bride? For complexions are so important. And just simple Camay care can help you to have a skin that's fresh, smooth, radiant. That's how modern girls do it—with Camay!

Just try this bland beauty soap that cleanses so thoroughly, ridding the face of all dust and grime. Then watch for the soft glow, the "alive" look that Camay's rich, creamy lather brings to your face. That's proof your skin is getting the gentle, stimulating care it needs for fresh good looks.

And Camay's so mild—mild as Nature in her gentlest mood! Time after time, in tests for mildness against other leading soaps, on every type of skin, Camay—the real beauty soap—was definitely, provably milder.

Begin today to care for your skin with Camay. Order half a dozen cakes from your dealer—its price is amazingly low.

Picture Story of Recovery of Bodies and Ransom Bills in Ross Kidnaping

THE VICTIM.
Charles Ross, retired manufacturer, was kidnaped September 25, near Chicago and $50,000 was paid but he was not freed.

THE KIDNAPER.
Peter Anders was arrested by G-men at Santa Anita race track nearly four months later and confessed he slew Ross.

BODIES FOUND HERE.
Anders led agents to a secluded spot in Wisconsin where a walled pit concealed the bodies of Ross and James Gray, Anders' associate in the kidnaping, whom he also slew in order to obtain the full ransom payment for himself. One of the searchers points to the boarded walls of the pit. Anders, a 30-year-old Northwest logger, was gambling with part of the ransom when seized. (Copyright, Chicago Daily News photo—from Associated Press Wirephoto.)

RANSOM MONEY.
Anders also showed Federal men where $30,000 of the ransom money was hidden. A G-man is shown stepping from an elevator at St. Paul F. B. I. headquarters with a typewriter case under his arm. Anders had placed the money in the case and buried it under brush in northern Minnesota.

DOUBLY MANACLED.
The case tightens about Anders, who is shown with Federal men after the recovery of the bodies and money. A hand is manacled to an agent and in addition there is a chain about his waist. These were precautions taken after Anders reportedly slugged an agent and attempted to escape in the Wisconsin woods.

All but Details Of Farm Bill Are Ironed Out

Compromise to Be Ready for Final Action Early Next Week.

By the Associated Press.

A compromise "ever normal granary" farm program will be ready for final Congressional action next week, House and Senate conferees predicted yesterday.

They said they had compromised all major differences between farm bills passed by the House and Senate at the special session of Congress and would work out minor details early in the week.

Conferees said the provisions agreed upon for major crops would work out this way:

Cotton—Production for 1938, fixed at 10,600,000 bales, to be divided among States and translated into acreage on the basis of past production, then subdivided among counties and farms.

Growers could market all they raised on allotted acreage. Those not complying with acreage limitations would face a penalty of 2 cents a pound and loss of right to Government loans. Normal supply fixed at 18,200,000 bales; marketing controls to operate when indicated supply reaches 19,500,000 bales.

Wheat—Production goal for 1938 fixed at 940,000,000 bushels, representing average annual domestic consumption and exports for last ten years plus 15 per cent for reserve.

Farmers could apply limit on sales when indicated supplies reach 940,000,000 bushels. Sales in excess of quota would be subject to penalty of 15 cents a bushel.

Growers Must Approve.

Corn—Production goal for 1938 fixed at 2,541,000,000 bushels; marketing control to operate when indicated supply reaches 2,792,000,000 bushels, if two-thirds of growers approved. Excess sales penalty 15 cents a bushel.

Tobacco—Production scaled to basis of domestic consumption and exports plus historic reserve or stored supply. Penalty for excess sales fixed at 50 per cent of purchase price or certain number of cents a pound, whichever is higher.

Rice—Production goal is average annual exports and domestic consumption for last five years, plus reserve. When marketing quotas operate, excess sales penalty would be one-fourth of a cent a pound.

N. Y. Wins 5-Year Fight Over Export Auto Trade

By the Associated Press.

Wilbur LaRoe, jr., counsel for the New York Port Authority and other New York interests, said yesterday an Interstate Commerce Commission decision apparently had ended a five-year fight between New York and New Orleans for control of export automobile traffic. New York was the winner, he added. LaRoe said the I. C. C. had rejected a request of New Orleans interests for a suspension of rates proposed by the railroads.

McKellar Asks Study Of Tennessee Security

By the Associated Press.

Senator McKellar, (Democrat), Tennessee, proposed yesterday a Senate investigation of the unemployment compensation division of Tennessee's Social Security system.

His resolution called for the appointment of five senators to study "administration, activities and operation" of the division with particular regard to the method of selecting personnel.

Col. McDonald's Death Held Suicide by F. B. I.

Kansas City, Jan. 21 (AP).—Dwight Brantley, agent in charge of the Federal Bureau of Investigation office here, said today the fatal shooting of Lieut. Col. Dale F. McDonald, 51, at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., yesterday was suicide.

Fellow army officers said McDonald recently had confided he was torn between a desire to get married and a feeling of responsibility to his invalid mother, with whom he lived.

and brought them down on the agent to whom he was chained. There was no possible chance of his escaping, and we quickly subdued him," Hoover said.

The prisoner was quoted by Hoover as relating he shot Ross and Gray. However, Coroner Dahl said Ross apparently died of a fractured skull. A hammer was found near his body.

Anders' story of abducting John and Olivia Borcia last Labor Day was confirmed today.

Borcia, Chicago cafe proprietor held at Albany, N. Y., for possessing a gun, told Assistant District Attorney H. S. Kahn he carried it for protection.

He said Anders and another man abducted him and his wife but released him near Lake Geneva, Wis., when he promised to raise $10,000. Later, he was quoted by Kahn, Anders freed Mrs. Borcia upon agreement to accept $5,000. Anders threatened him, he said, when he failed to pay.

U.A.W. Men Seized At Ford Factory

Detroit, Jan. 21 (AP).—Dearborn police arrested several hundred persons attempting to distribute literature of the United Automobile Workers at the Ford Motor Co.'s Rouge plant today.

Union leaders estimated 1,500 unemployed automobile workers participated in the demonstration. There was no disorder.

Highest Court to Weigh Rights of Nonunionists

New York, Jan. 21 (AP).—Attorney Nathan W. Math said tonight Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes had signed an order opening the way for the United States Supreme Court to decide whether a worker can be discharged if he refuses to join a labor union with which his employer has signed a closed shop agreement.

Math's law firm represents six New York subway workers who challenged in court the right of the New York Rapid Transit Corporation and three other subsidiaries of the Brooklyn-Manhattan Transit Corporation to enter into a closed shop contract with the Transport Workers Union of America (C. I. O.).

Barkley Calls Night Sessions To Break Jam

Southerners Repeat Determination to Talk Lynch Bill to Death

By the Associated Press.

Southern Senators reiterated yesterday their determination to talk the anti-lynching bill to death despite a call by Senate Majority Leader Barkley (Democrat), Kentucky, for energy-sapping night sessions.

Barkley—apparently seeking to break the filibuster which Southerners have waged 14 days—told the Senate he would ask for night sessions beginning Monday. He said other important measures were piling up behind and that it must be disposed of. Minority Leader McNary (Republican), Oregon, and Senator Van Nuys (Democrat), Indiana, expressed approval of the night sessions.

Senator Connally (Democrat), of Texas, strategist for Southern Senate forces, said he did not object to night sessions, but added bluntly that Southerners would fight vigorously against any effort to "cram this measure down our throats."

Speechmaking against the anti-lynching bill continued unabated yesterday. Senator Bilbo (Democrat), of Mississippi, threatening to go on 60 days if necessary.

Bilbo expressed hearty approval of legislative recommendations of President Roosevelt and then told the Senate:

"The purity and virtue and womanhood of the mothers, wives, daughters and sweethearts of Dixie, and constitutional government are more precious to me and mine than every measure recommended by the incomparable leader of our party and our Nation."

2 Lost in Alaska On Hunting Trip

Two American seamen who left the Alaskan Aerological Observation Post at Kanaga, Aleutian Islands, Wednesday on a hunting trip, have not been heard from since, the Navy Department revealed yesterday.

The men are R. R. Gibson, pharmacist's mate, and Clyde Musick, ship's cook, first class.

Although very meager information was available, the Navy said searching parties were still seeking the two men. Officials explained, however, that only a handful of men are stationed at the weather post.

4 Persons Escape Injury In Blowtorch Explosion

Four persons escaped injury yesterday when two plate-glass windows were shattered by the explosion of a blow torch in an Elite Laundry branch office at 708 H street northwest.

Mrs. Helen Lawless, 1700 B street northeast, and two plumbere were uninjured. Mrs. Betty Stein, who was asleep in an apartment over the store, said she was nearly thrown from bed.

Nine Hurt Here As Driving Rain Pelts District

Vestiges of melting snow, slippery streets, a dismal downpour and heavy mist caused numerous accidents in and around the District yesterday. The Weather Bureau predicted continued rain and rising temperatures for today.

Three coasters were injured when their sled struck a parked car at Prout street and Nichols avenue southeast.

They were Kathleen Marsh, 25, of 1235 U street southeast, cut leg; Donald Russell, 31, of 2228 Prout street southeast, cut face and hands; and Frank Holcomb, 27, of 1322 Pleasant street southeast. The victims were taken to Providence Hospital.

Her Ankle Fractured.

Mrs. Maria G. Merrill, 50, of 1214 Hemlock street northwest, suffered a fracture of the ankle when she fell in the 3700 block Eighteenth street northeast.

Helen M. Schwartz, 32, of the 1700 block Kenyon street northwest, suffered a fracture of the foot, and Anna Reicks, 33, of the same address, suffered possible fracture of several ribs when an automobile in which they were passengers collided with a street car at First street and Constitution avenue northeast. They were taken to Casualty Hospital. The driver of the automobile was reported to be William W. Reicks, 34, of the Kenyon street address.

Child Hit by Auto.

William Jones, 7, of 907 H street northwest, suffered a bruised eye and skinned knees when he was struck by an automobile on North Capitol street between H and I streets northwest. He was treated at Sibley Hospital.

When their automobile skidded and ran off the road near Red's Corner, Md., James McGill, 36, of Suitland, Md., suffered fractures of several ribs, and Lewis Brown, 37, of 115 D street southeast, suffered head cuts. They were taken to Providence Hospital.

By Scott Hart.

Won't Play.

The other day we hinted that better feeling was dawning—if ever so slightly—between the rank and file of the C. I. O. and the A. F. of L. This pronouncement was based on the report of a U. F. W. A. field worker, then just returned from the field. It was, so far as organized labor was concerned, a happy prospect. Now it takes a bump.

The U. F. W. A. (C. I. O.), people in the Railroad Retirement Board yesterday, reported a repulse of the dove of co-operation they had uncaged: "In order to present a unified program to the board, in the most effective manner, our local urged Lodge 375, A. F. G. E. (A. F. of L.), to co-operate with us. We presented our program to a sub-committee of the executive committee of the lodge, appointed for this purpose. We regret to say that the sub-committee refused to join with us on this vital problem affecting the welfare of Railroad Retirement Board employes. Our local will continue its plans to secure the action of the board on this program."

We append five figurative lines for your own comment on this happy state of affairs in the Federal field of American labor.

From Missouri.

Apples and corncob pipes will feature the Missouri State Society dance at the Mayflower tonight, we hear. This is the arrangement: The Missouri district having the most persons in representation at the dance will receive the apples and pipes; the apples will go to the ladies, the pipes to the men. Gov. Lloyd Stark, of Missouri, donated the barrel of apples; a Missouri corncob pipe manufacturer donated the pipes. The latter are known as "Missouri meerchaums" . . . Treasury Local 11, U. F. W. A., offers another dance tonight at 532 Seventeenth street. Refreshments will be free.

Overtime.

A little story on how overtime is created by the employes themselves: Twenty-three per cent of all calls upon the FCA Stenographic Section are received between 1:30 and 2:30 p. m. Forty-two per cent of all calls are received between 1:30 and 3:30 p. m. As contrasted with these figures, during the first hour in the morning only 9 per cent of the day's total are received, and from 11:30 to 1:30 only 13 per cent. Obviously, the load should be spread throughout the day. And besides helping yourself and the stenographic section, a spread of the work will help the young women in the vise section who usually are required to work until 8 or 8:30 in the evening getting out correspondence that reached them late in the business day or even after the regular business hours.

Advice.

"You can keep the job the Government has trained you for if you will get to work with united effort on the Ramspeck bill (H. R. 2700), Representative Gomer Smith (Oklahoma), told members of the Association of Non-Classified Federal Employes the other night. The bill provides for a civil service status for non-classified workers, through non-competitive examinations. "Get the bill out of committee and onto the floor and you will have my vote," Smith promised.

The association was awarded a charter in the Association Non-Classified Federal Employes of America, Inc., with Charles E. Reed as president; M. M. Celler, vice president; Miss Ann Davidson, secretary; Herman B. Baxley, treasurer; F. G. Morrison, chairman, committee on revision of laws; L. F. Cotter, chairman, privileges and membership, assisted by Miss Lillian Brown, Miss Georgia Chapple and Charles W. Margolies; Augustus F. McNair, chairman, order of business. The next meting will be in mid-February in the Old Interior Building.

Hull Deplores Mexican Tariff Rate Increase

U. S. Secretary 'Sorry and Disappointed' by Step, He Says.

By the Associated Press.

Secretary Hull, commenting on Mexico's drastic tariff increases, yesterday said he was "sorry and disappointed" to see any country take such a step. Raising of obstacles to trade cannot solve economic difficulties, he said.

"I am sorry and disappointed," he declared, "to see any country find itself in a position where it feels compelled to raise already high trade barriers with their ultimate harmful effects, just at a time when most of the nations of the world are giving increasing attention and efforts to the lessening of trade barriers and the promotion of prosperity and peace through increased trade.

"This Government has the matter under study."

The Secretary did not attempt to disguise his deep feeling over what economists generally regard as Mexico's direct challenge in principle to Hull's reciprocal trade program designed to lower international tariff barriers.

Contract Bridge

Luck Plus Skill.

There is no denying the fact that luck plays its part even in the highly skillful game of duplicate bridge. But even when a player is "getting the breaks" he must cooperate with Good oFrtune in order to achieve the best results. Top score on a certain board in a recent duplicate went to the North-South pair who, quite unwarrantedly reached a three notrump contract on the following hand:

South, dealer.
Neither side vulnerable.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 N T	Pass	2 N T	Pass
3 N T	Pass	Pass	Pass

South knew his opening bid to be shaded but, with his two Ace-Jack suits, decided that any other opening would be even less propitious. Then, when he was raised by partner to two notrump, against his own better judgment he went to game.

After West had opened a low spade and the dummy appeared, declarer felt far from confortable—it did not seem possible that the cards could lay so well that nine tricks could be brought home. Naturally, however, he did not give up.

Capturing East's spade King, he led three rounds of clubs, getting his first "break" when the suit split. On the fourth club East, declarer and West all descarded low diamonds. A low heart was led from dummy, and declarer got his second break when the eight-spot forced West's Queen.

At this point West was up against it. His diamond discard had left him defenseless. Rather than establish declarer's probable spade Jack, West laid down the diamond Ace and continued with the eight-spot. The King won (a third break for declarer that the diamond Ace was "right"), and another heart finesse succeeded. The cashing of the heart Ace forced West to discard a spade. Now the diamond Jack was led, throwing West on lead and forcing him to play up to the guarded spade Jack.

Undoubtedly, declarer had remarkable luck in bringing home nine tricks, but at least he had capitalized his opportunity, including West's faulty defense. Obviously, had West keut all of his diamonds and discarded a spade, he could have established enough diamond tricks to defeat the contract.

Teachers' Credit Union Progress Is Outlined

Progress of the District of Columbia Teachers Federal Credit Union since its organization eight months ago was outlined by speakers last night at a meeting in the Franklin Administration Building.

New officers of the union were announced as follows: John Paul Collins, principal of Anacostia Junior-Senior High School, president; Dr. Ellis Haworth, Wilson Teachers College, vice president; Miss Ruth Stuart, Franklin School, secretary, and E. Y. Olney, treasurer.

Japanese Move 20,000 to Aid Suchow Drive

By the Associated Press.

Shanghai (Saturday), Jan. 22.—Twenty thousand Japanese cavalrymen and artillerymen were reported today moving up to the lower Shantung Province front to bolster an offensive virtually stalled by sleet, snow and fierce Chinese resistance.

Chinese sources said the reinforcements were taken from the Peiping-Hankow Railway and the Shansi Province fronts to the west to augment the army of 60,000 that had been trying for days to smash through the vital Lunghai Railway across central China.

From north and south Japanese arrayed on two weather-harassed fronts, 170 miles apart, fought to effect a junction at Suchow, northwestern Kiangsu Province, where the Lunghai crosses the north-south Tientsin-Pukow Railway.

An estimated 400,000 Chinese soldiers confronted the Japanese on the two sides of the Lunghai.

Chinese advices said that the Chinese counter-offensive aimed at Wuhu, on the Yangtze River, 60 miles southwest of Nanking, had been slowed up by "superior Japanese artillery."

On a fourth front, the Japanese reported they were "liquidating" a Chinese threat to recapture Hangchow, a provincial capital 125 miles southwest of Shanghai. The Chinese forces were said to be falling back to the west.

Enlargement of enlisted and commissioned officer strength—an increase of 5,285 enlisted men and 241 officers for the Navy, and 1,000 enlisted men and 24 officers for the Marine Corps.

A continued expansion program, with $1,277,000 to reopen the torpedo manufacturing plant at Alexandria, Va.; $2,824,224 for the Pearl Harbor (Hawaii) Navy Yard, and $1,500,000 for the Naval Air Station at Alameda, Calif.

Two Lead Fight.

Together, Representative Gerald J. Boileau, Wisconsin Progressive, and Representative Maury Maverick, Texas Democrat, led the unsuccesful fight to curb battleship outlays.

Boileau offered an amendment to allot $3,100,000 for new aircraft instead of using the money to start work on two $70,000,000 superdreadnaughts. In the end his amendment was defeated, 93 to 25.

Boileau, who said the battleships would be "helpless" against attacks by modern planes, said his proposal would build 31 more large bombing planes, or 52 scouting ships or 74 "fighters."

Proposal Ridiculed.

Representative William B. Ulmstead, of North Carolina, sub-committee chairman, said the Navy did not have facilities to service more planes, and Representative Byron B. Harlan, Ohio Democrat, said it was a "laugh" to consider substituting airplanes for battleships. But Boileau contended the planes would be ready while "the keels of these battleships are laying around some navy yard."

Chairman Vinson, of the Naval Affairs Committee, refused to take part in the argument on respective advantages of the two types of fighting craft, but contended:

"It is imperative that we have both planes and ships."

"Give the people a national defense and a Navy second to none," he urged House members.

The bill reduces the appropriation for procurement of airplanes $5,928,000 below this year's figures. With a goal of from 1,910 to 2,050 planes by 1941, the bill would permit 320 new planes to be ordered. It contemplates having on hand 1,870 useful planes by July 1, 1939.

Behind in Plane Orders.

Umstead told the House the Navy was behind in plane orders and deliveries, but had 625 new planes on order.

Maverick, usually aligned with Administration supporters, said he thought it "unfair" for the President to await a vote on the Navy appropriation bill before sending up additional proposals for naval enlargement.

He called battleships an offensive, rather than a defensive, weapon, and told the House the new battleship construction would cost the Government $10,000,000 more than Standard Oil investments in China, which, he declared, the Navy would be called upon to protect.

Representative Fish did not oppose the new battleship construction because he said building by other great powers had "forced our hand," but declared:

"There is going to be a real fight in Congress if President Roosevelt asks for more battleships to police the world and quarantine nations."

Reduction Move Loses.

Failing in his effort to increase airplane appropriations, Boileau later moved to cut the new battleship construction, but this amendment also was defeated, 101 to 27.

A minority motion to send the bill back to committee to eliminate funds for reopening the Alexandria torpedo plant was offered at the last minute by Representative Charles A. Plumley (Republican), Vermont, but was defeated overwhelmingly on a voice vote.

Japanese Plans Sought.

London, Jan. 21 (AP).—Great Britain today instructed its ambassador to Tokyo to find out if Japan secretly was building super-battleships of more than 35,000 tons.

The Admirality declared there still was sufficient time to modify Britain's 1938 battleship tonnage if published reports of Japan's naval plans were confirmed.

Should the reports be borne out by Sir Robert Leslie Craigie's report, Great Britain, the United States and France would be released from the 1936 London Naval Treaty limitations to 35,000 ton capital ships and 16-inch guns.

The treaty, to which Japan declined to adhere, carried an escape clause permitting signatories to break the restrictions to compete with larger warships of other nations.

Mrs. Roosevelt's Associates Deny Hair-Bobbing

By the United Press.

Intimates of Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt tonight denied reports that the First Lady had shattered White House tradition by having her hair bobbed.

A close friend said the hair at the sides had been trimmed slightly but did not change her coiffure, and that she retained the style of wearing a knot at the nape of the neck.

Mrs. Roosevelt wears her hair waved and brushed back over the upper part of each ear.

Internal Revenues Gain 52 Per Cent

By the Associated Press.

The Treasury said yesterday that, in spite of the business recession, internal revenue collections were 52.7 per cent higher in the last six months of 1937 than in the last half of 1936.

Although nearly half the increase was due to social security taxes, the so-called nuisance taxes produced nearly 63 per cent more revenue and most other revenues except those on liquor also increased.

Total internal revenue collections, which do not include customs, amounted to $2,828,294,030 in the last half of 1937, an increase of $963,893,248 over the comparable period in 1936.

Powerful Bomb Is Found Under Seattle Pier After Reported Plot to Blast Japanese Liner

Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

Dynamite sticks numbering 369 and an alarm clock timing device (inset) were found in a "suitcase bomb" recovered from Seattle Harbor near where the Japanese liner Hiye Maru was anchored. Rolphe Forsyth, a 27-year-old former Canadian school teacher, was drowned in what apparently was an attempt to push the bomb alongside the vessel. George Partridge, 22, of Vancouver, B. C., is held in connection with the plot.

By the Associated Press.

Seattle, Jan. 21 (AP).—A powerful bomb fashioned for an asserted attempt to blow up the Japanese liner Hiye Maru, was found beneath a Seattle pier today and police began investigating reported ramifications of the unsuccessful plot..

The bomb yielded 369 sticks of "60 per cent dynamite, 28 fuses and a time-firing device. An expert said it contained enough explosive to blast a hole 5 or 6 feet in diameter in the ship's hull.

A preliminary examination indicated water leaking into the bomb's covering—a suitcase—stopped the time device when the contact hand was only one-eighth of an inch from the firing position.

Mild-mannered Rolphe Forsyth, 27, former Canadian schoolmaster who drowned apparently after swimming and pushing the bomb into position alongside the ship, was described by acquaintances as one who "abhorred war, brutality and killing."

George Partridge, 22, Vancouver, British Columbia, laborer who admitted taking part in the plot, stuck to his story that Forsyth promised him $1,000 for the job and insisted "Oriental interests" would supply the money.

In Vancouver, Chief Constable W. W. Foster made public a statement by Partridge's brother, William, a barber, asserting that George had told him about the plot three weeks ago.

"George said he had a chance to go to San Francisco," the statement read. "I asked him what he wanted to go there for and he said that Forsyth had been in San Francisco and contacted a foreign consul there.

"Forsyth asked the consul what he would give him to blow up Japanese boats carrying scrap metal from Pacific ports to Japan.

"The consul refused to finance any undertaking until he was satisfied the plans were successful. Should he (Forsyth) be successful in blowing up a ship he would be paid."

"The consul then offered to finance them and pay for any further ships that were blown up."

Chinese Consul, Gen. C. C. Huang, in San Francisco said he had no knowledge of any proposals to bomb ships carrying scrap metal to Japan, and that he did not know either Forsyth or George Partridge.

3-Judge Federal Court Declares TVA Lawful Even Though Competition Destroys Utilities

TVA

The TVA contended that under the "power to dispose of property" given the Federal Government by the Constitution, it had the right to conduct electricity into the States and to sell it upon the terms and in the manner it was using.

Complainants insisted that power to control intrastate utility service belonged exclusively to the States, so that the sale and rate-fixing contracts with cities and other agencies constituted an invasion of the rights of the States.

James Lawrence Fly, general counsel for the TVA, described the decision as "a milestone in the conservation movement.

Ruling Called "Milestone."

"If our great interstate rivers are to serve the public interest effectively," he said, "their development must be through the integrated system of multiple purpose projects performing such combined functions as navigation, flood control and power production. Here an integral part of the inland waterways system is to be developed and controlled by the authority for its optimum uses.

"Only the Government ever has undertaken or may ever be expected to undertake this type of development.

"In this decision the courts have again recognized that the law does not require and public policy does not permit the Government to waste the power resources which are captured through such a development. It is to be hoped that the final appeal to the Supreme Court can be disposed of in the same expeditious manner which has characterized the proceedings conducted by Judges Allen, Gore and Martin. The Government will co-operate with the complainants in every way to that end."

The suit was designed for a rapid Supreme Court ruling, which was expected to have a definite bearing on the "little TVA" proposed by the Administration.

It was originally filed by 19 private utilities in Knoxville Chancery Court, but was removed to Federal court by the TVA. The Georgia Power Co.—nineteenth complainant—was excluded because it had instituted a similar suit in Georgia.

District Federal Judge John J. Gore refused a year ago to dismiss the suit and subsequently issued a temporary injunction halting most TVA activities. He predicated his order on the utilities' claim they were threatened with "irreparable injury."

Injunction Dissolved.

That injunction was dissolved by the Circuit Court of Appeals, which said both the TVA and public would suffer if it remained in force. The case was remanded for trial on its merits.

It now has contracts with 18 municipalities and 16 co-operative associations receiving TVA power; with eight municipalities and three co-operatives for future power, and is serving two utilities, the Arkansas Power & Light Co. and the Alabama Power Co.

Since the creation of the TVA act in 1933, Norris Dam on Clinch River above Knoxville and Wheeler Dam on the main river in Alabama have been completed. Wilson Dam, near Muscle Shoals in Alabama, built by Army engineers but now a part of the TVA system, is also in operation.

Four Dams Under Way.

Dams under construction are Guntersville, on the main river near Guntersville, Ala.; Chickamauga, on the main stream near Chattanooga; Hiwassee, on the Hiwassee River in North Carolina, and Pickwick landing on the main stream in Tennessee.

Preliminary work is under way for dams on the main river at Gilbertsville, Watts Bar and Coulter Shoals. A dam has been recommended at Fontana on the Little River in North Carolina, but no funds were provided for work there.

The network of electrical lines extend from Norris Dam, in Northeastern Tennessee, across the State to Memphis on the extreme southwestern tip of the State, a distance of about 500 miles.

Since 1934 the dams have produced more than 1,750,000,000 kilowatt hours of electricity which has been sold for a gross income of more than $5,000,000.

With the expansion of power facilities, the TVA obtained valuable industrial contracts which are expected to yield an annual income of $4,300,000. These contracts, it is expected, will make the TVA power program a financial success when normal consumption will have been reached on December 1 next.

The authority's plans call for reaching the peak in power production by 1944.

Norris Dam has been the TVA's major development to date, and has been the first phase in the New Deal program for "yardstick" power rates.

On the hills near the dam the authority built the model town of Norris, run on a co-operative basis, at a cost of about $3,300,000. Two recreational parks of several thousand acres along the artificial lake have also been laid out.

Besides these developments, the TVA has sought to raise the economic and social levels of the people with educational programs of reforestation, soil and erosion control, better farming and improved community life.

By the Associated Press.

Norris Inquiry Speeded.

Senator Norris expressed gratification yesterday when informed that a three-judge Federal court at Chattanooga had ruled operation of power dams by the Tennessee Valley Authority was constitutional.

"Of course I had anticipated that decision," the veteran Nebraska independent said. "I don't see how it could have been decided otherwise."

Norris has sponsored the Administration's power legislation, and the Norris TVA Dam was named for him.

"It looks like this might be the end of the litigation that has harassed TVA from the very beginning," he said.

Meanwhile, the Senate Agricultural Committee recommended passage of a resolution offered by Senator Norris calling for an investigation of the Tennessee Valley Authority. The resolution would empower the Federal Trade Commission to make the investigation. Besides studying activities of the agency itself, the commission would investigate any efforts of private utilities to hamper, its operations.

Norris proposed the investigation after friction had been reported among members of the TVA board.

From David E. Lilienthal, member of the TVA board, came this statement:

"By clearing up all the legal issues, the decision paves the way for a rational, business-like adjustment of relations between TVA and the private power companies. TVA can go forward in the development and saving of our natural resources without the lawsuits which have held up this constructive work for four years."

Highlights of TVA Decision

Major findings of a three-judge Federal court in dismissing a suit by 18 private utilities which challenged constitutionality of the Tennessee Valley Authority were as follows:

The TVA did not conspire to destroy the utilities, to compete illegally with them or to coerce the power companies to sell their facilities at distress figures.

The TVA did not conspire with the Public Works Administration to finance construction of municipal distribution systems so that TVA power might be sold at such low rates that private utilities would be destroyed.

Municipalities were not coerced into purchasing TVA power.

The complainants will suffer substantial future damages as the result of being forced to meet lower TVA rates, but these will be "damages in the absence of legal injury."

The TVA is complying with its creative statute.

The primary function of the authority is flood control and navigation, with power production secondary.

Labor Board Files Willard Suit Brief

The National Labor Relations Board yesterday filed with the Circuit Court of Appeals for the District a brief asking enforcement of its order directing the Willard Hotel to reinstate two discharged employes and to refrain from alleged unfair labor practices. The petition which the brief supports was filed October 26.

The board had ordered the hotel to re-employ, with back pay, Garland P. Webb, room service waiter, and Mabel Norman, coffee shop waitress, both discharged allegedly for union activity.

The board announced it had certified the Newspaper Guild of New York as bargaining representative selected by a majority of commercial employes of News Syndicate, Inc., publisher of the Daily News and the Sunday News.

Willkie Offer To Sell Seized By Tennessee

State Ready to Join TVA in Taking Over Utilities, Governor Says.

By the Associated Press.

Nashville, Tenn., Jan. 21.—Gov. Gordon Browning outlined tonight a program through which he said the State "is prepared to join hands" with the Tennessee Valley Authority in acquiring utility companies operating in Tennessee.

His proposal followed one made last week by Wendell L. Willkie, president of the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation, that the Federal Government purchase the corporation's utility-operating companies in the Tennessee Valley. Under Willkie's plan, the Government would acquire the property at a price to be fixed by negotiation or determined by three arbitrators.

Browning said Willkie's offer is "an opportunity to give to the people of Tennessee TVA power without the necessity of waiting out endless litigation," and asserted that he was ready to join with the TVA "in acquiring at their fair value the Tennessee electric properties of Mr. Willkie's company."

The Governor added that his offer also applied to "such other companies as show a similar disposition to arrive at this sensible solution of a serious problem."

Browning proposed that "the generating and transmission facilities be purchased by the TVA and that the distribution and allied facilities be purchased and operated by one or more power districts" created by the State.

He said that neither the State nor the power districts would levy taxes and that the obligations would be retired from earnings.

Browning said his plan will be placed immediately before President Roosevelt and directors of the Tennessee Vally Authority.

Gravs Sees "War" End.

Montgomery, Ala., Jan. 21 (AP).—Gov. Bibb Graves, learning a three-judge Federal court had held operation of Tennessee Valley Authority dams constitutional, said today "that is one of the greatest of the great victories" for the Roosevelt Administration.

"And I hope it will end the war."

D.C. Suffrage Unit Sponsors Parley To Map Campagn

The executive committee of the District of Columbia Suffrage Association last night was authorized to call a conference of representatives of every civic, patriotic and professional organization in Washington for the purpose of concentrating on a drive for votes here. Time and place of the conference will be announced later, according to Wilbur S. Finch, president of the group.

Five new vice presidents were selected at last night's session. These included Eugene Meyer, publisher of The Washington Post; Theodore S. Grape, Julius I. Peyser, L. A. Carruthers and John B. Colpoys.

A motion to petition every District resident of voting age on his views about District suffrage was referred to the executive committee for further study. If and when the petitions are signed, they will be submitted to Congress. Last night's meeting was held in the board room of the District Building.

Honorary vice presidents elected at last month's meeting included Sen. Arthur Capper, of Kansas; Mrs. Eleanor Patterson, publisher of the Washington Times and Herald; Dr. H. L. Reichelderfer and James C. Yaden.

Russia to Abandon Rumania Ministry

The announcement lent color to reports that Russia was displeased at the anti-semitism and fascist tendencies of the new government of Premier Octavan Goga.

The soviet envoy, M. W. Ostrowski, who was recalled two weeks ago, took formal leave of King Carol today. The Russian Legation will be headed by a Charge d'Affaires.

Meanwhile, provincial and municipal authorities received orders not to renew residence permits for rabbis unless they held Rumanian citizenship.

Herbert Gookins Heads Washington Air Derby

The Washington Air Derby last night held its annual membership meeting at which Herbert Gookins was elected president for the coming year.

Gookins and Mrs. Virginia Shilt were both made members. The board of directors of the association, and other officers chosen were: Clarence S. Bruce, vice president; Mrs. Mary F. Benson, secretary, and Miss Helen Frigo, treasurer.

Chautemps Voted Confidence, Puts Defenses on War Basis

Paris

Just before the government carried its program to Parliament, all army, navy and air forces had been centralized under Daladier, a measure usually taken only in wartime.

While Navy Minister William Bertrand and Air Minister Guy Lachambre retained their independent portfolios they were brought under the supervision of Daladier, who already held the war post.

Gen. Marie Gamelin, chief of the army staff, was made chief of the general staff of national defense, which included all three services.

The ministerial declaration asked for "an atmosphere of industry, voluntary discipline and civic accord" to end the labor, financial and diplomatic troubles which brought about the downfall of Chautemps' previous government a week ago today.

"We call on all the nation at once to take cognizance of the too real perils which menace it," the ministers declared, "and to feel the invincible force it possesses to overcome them."

Bond With Democracies.

Specifically, the Chautemps government pledged:

1. A foreign policy "based on fidelity to the League of Nations" as the "best guaranty of the peace of the world."

2. A national defense policy "faithful to the common ideals which bind it to the great democracies," particularly Great Britain.

3. Social reforms as outlined by the People's Front which would "assure respect for the legitimate authority of the employers and the right of the worker to the security and dignity of his work, and which will permit just arbitration of inevitable labor conflicts and the peaceful settlement of strikes."

4. A financial policy based on a balanced budget and "energetic defense of the national currency" through the tripartite accords with Great Britain and the United States.

Dr. E. F. Frazier Addresses Colored

Economic emancipation of the colored population in the District is dependent upon the degree of social security of other elements of the population, declared speakers at the annual mass meeting of the Pleasant Plains Civic Association last night in the auditorium of Miner Teachers College.

Dr. E. Franklin Frazier, professor of sociology at Howard University, indicated slums will continue here as long as the colored can obtain only used houses at a higher rental than new homes for white citizens. He urged colored civic bodies to use their influence to make the government assume larger responsibility for low cost housing.

Dr. Doxie A. Wilkerson, also of Howard Uuiversity, Maj. Campbell C. Johnson, secretary of the Twelfth Street Young Men's Christian Association, Miss Nannie H. Burroughs, Mrs. Velma Williams, president of the Pleasant Plains Association, and Archibald S. Pinkett, and T. J. Anderson, who presided, were other speakers.

'Truth' Is Subject Of Lesson-Sermon

"Truth" is the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all the churches of Christ, Scientist, tomorrow. The Golden Text is from Psalms 86:15: "Thou, O Lord, art a God full of compassion, and gracious, long-suffering, and plentious in mercy and truth."

Among the citations which comprise the Lesson-Sermon is the following from the Bible: "Then spake Jesus again unto them, saying, I am the light of the world: he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." (John 8:12).

The Lesson-Sermon also includes the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health With Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "This is 'the of holiness,' that when Truth heals the sick, it casts out evils, and when Truth casts out the evil called disease, it heals the sick."

Historic Churches

The National City Christian Church.

National Christian Church Organized at Cottage in 1844

Mother Organization of Disciples in District Had O. A. Bartholomew as First Pastor; President Garfield Was Member.

The National City Christian Church, formerly the Vermont Avenue Church, is the mother church of the Disciples of Christ in the District. It was organized in 1844 with a series of cottage meetings, the first of which was held at the home of Dr. James T. Barclay, pioneer foreign missionary of the Disciples.

In 1869, the congregation bought a small frame chapel on M street, near Ninth street northwest. It was dedicated by Isaac Errett. O. A. Bartholomew was the first pastor. Five others succeeded him, and in 1875, the Rev. F. D. Power became minister, serving until 1911.

The present site on Vermont avenue was purchased in 1871. James A. Garfield attended services there, both as a member of Congress and as President. It was principally as a memorial to President Garfield that the present Vermont Avenue Christian Church was dedicated in 1884. In 1910, Dr. Earle Wilfley became Dr. Power's associate pastor and the next year assumed the leadership.

For years the pastors and such leaders as Alexander Campbell, Jeremiah S. Black, Attorney General of the United States, and President Garfield had dreamed of a national Christian Church. Largely through the efforts of Dr. Wilfley, this dream was realized with the dedication of the National City Christian Church in October, 1930. The building was erected through the gifts of more than 40,000 Disciples.

It is estimated 15,000 visitors worship at the Thomas Circle building every year. Dr. Wilfley, who resigned in 1931, was succeeded by the Rev. H. H. Harman as ad interim pastor. In 1933, Dr. Raphael Harwood Miller accepted the pastorate. During the four years of his ministry, 776 have taken membership.

Dr. Rustin Occupies Mt. Vernon Pulpit

Dr. John W. Rustin, pastor of Mount Vernon Place M. E. Church South, will preach at both services tomorrow, "The Power of His Might" his morning sermon subject. "When God Is Near" will be his subject at the 8 o'clock service.

There will be special music by the choir and soloists at each worship service. Dr. Rustin will speak in a series of services celebrating Religious Emphasis Week at Emory and Henry College, Emory, Va., next week.

The departments of the church school will meet at 9:30 tomorrow. Mrs. J. D. Ford will speak on "The Church and Social Service" at the adult division service at 9:30 tomorrow.

Forty-Fifth Anniversary.

Memorial United Brethren Church opens tomorrow its celebration of the forty-fifth anniversary of its founding, with the minister, Dr. S. B. Daugherty, speaking at 11 a. m. on "Retrospect, Introspect and Prospect." The one living charter member will be honored at this service. The 8 p. m. meeting will be a home-coming, when all who have been members of the church or Sunday school for 40 years or more will sit in a space reserved for them. The minister will speak briefly on "Day by Day With God."

Seminary Singers Will Give Concert In D.C. Tomorrow

The Seminary Singers, choral group from Boston University's school of theology, and the only chorus in the world composed of student ministers, will present concerts of sacred and secular music in Washington tomorrow in two churches. At 4 tomorrow afternoon the chorus will sing at Takoma Park Baptist Church and will conclude their day in the Capital with a program tomorrow evening at Foundry M. E. Church, starting at 8 o'clock.

Under the direction of Prof. James Russell Houghton, who is a nephew of the Rev. W. E. LaRue, pastor of the Takoma Park Baptist Church, the Seminary Singers have traveled over 5,000 miles in the last year, giving concerts in principal cities throughout the Nation. This year a more extensive itinerary has been made for the group, with a tour of the South and possibly a trip to Europe.

The chorus numbers 35 men studying for the ministry. In their selections the Seminary Singers are assisted by Dr. Houghton and Miss Ruth Winship as soloists, and Miss Catherine Carver, pianist.

Friends Will Hear Dr. Rufus Jones

Dr. Rufus M. Jones, chairman of the American Friends Service committe, will be the principal speaker at a conference at the Friends Meeting House, 2111 Florida avenue, today and tomorrow, arranged by the Fellowship Council, a section of the American Friends Service committee.

Dr. Jones will address the conference tonight at 7:30 p. m. and again tomorrow afternoon at 2 p. m. The subject of his main address on Saturday night is "Friends and Their Frontier Problems." Dr. Jones sails February 1 for a several months' tour of South Africa, where he will be filling many speaking engagements in university and church circles.

Other speakers at the sessions which open at 2 o'clock today are Dr. Henry Cadbury, of Harvard University; Dr. Anna Brinton, of Pendle Hill School; Janet Payne Whitney, author of the recent very popular biography of Elizabeth Fry, and David M. Edwards, president of Friends University, at Wichita, Kans., who makes the closing address tomorrow afternoon at 2:45 p. m.

Bishop to Preach At John Wesley

Bishop William Cornelius Brown, of Los Angeles, former pastor of John Wesley A. M. E. Zion Church, will return to this church to be guest preacher at 11 a. m. services tomorrow. The bishop was pastor of the church from 1912 to 1920.

Howard University. Dr. Charles H. Wesley, head of the department of history and acting dean of the graduate school, will address the congregation at 11 a. m. services in Andrew Rankin Memorial Chapel.

Beard Spirited Back to Atlanta From Jail Here

Crime

dit" was held under $2,000 bond in the Hyattsville jail and six colored men, suspected of robberies in Washington, were arrested at Muirkirk, Md., after their automobile collided with another in Hyattsville.

The Frazee-Potomac Laundry at 1402 R street northwest was robbed of $30 last night by a colored bandit who entered just as Miss Una L. Boyles, 35, of 501 Seventh street northeast, was preparing to close. She said he kept his right hand concealed in an overcoat pocket which he thrust toward her, forcing her into a rear room before rifling the cash register.

After a two-weeks' sojourn at the Lorton Reformatory, Beard, Warring and their companions, manacled to five deputy United States marshals, were herded through the concourse of Union Station after using the Presidential entrance to start their return trip to the Federal Penitentiary at Atlanta.

Beard Is Silent.

Beard and Warring were brought from Lorton to the U. S. Marshal's Office in District Court shortly before 5 p. m. Accompanying them were Sam Montgomery and Joseph Barnes, alias Bond, two of Warring's lieutenants, and James Steele, a colored man serving 20 years for robbery.

Few attaches of the marshal's office or District Court were aware of what was hapening until the gangsters were behind bars. Then Beard's attorney, John Sirica, was closeted with his client until a few minutes before train time. Sirica said Beard "had nothing to say."

Pale and gaunt after 18 months in prison, the one-time kingpin of local rackets was clad in denim prison overalls and a khaki jacket. He had apparently lost much of the bravado which marked his spectacular gambling trial.

As he entered a basement door of District Court, Beard greeted deputy marshals with a friendly "Hello." He shook hands with several bystanders, but his smile of greeting quickly faded as Lorton guards pushed him into the cell block.

Harry Whelan, another attorney, visited members of the Warring group and refused also to comment.

Hundreds Watch.

Just after 6 p. m., deputy marshals who were to accompany the quintet to Atlanta entered the cells with handcuffs. With their coat collars high around their faces, the prisoners were half-dragged and half-pushed to waiting cars.

Several hundred spectators watched the prisoners as they hurried through the train gate at Union Station. As he stepped into the special Pullman, Beard—unable to see because of the coat collar about his face—slipped and fell beneath the car.

He was hastily dragged to his feet by two marshals. Handcuffed to Montgomery, Beard almost pulled his companion down with him.

The transfers back to Atlanta were ordered by Attorney General Homer Cummings after protests over the men's return to Lorton. Officials and civic leaders feared Beard would reach through the bars of his Lorton cell to regain control of gambling here.

Has Four Years to Serve.

The Washington Criminal Justice Association led the fight to have Beard and members of the Warring outfit re-transferred from this jurisdiction. Convictions of both factions carried recommendations that their sentences be served "as far from Washington as possible."

The return here was in exchange for several "desperate" Lorton inmates who had been causing trouble. Authorities at Atlanta selected those to be exchanged and the transfer was approved by District officials.

Beard has approximately four years yet to serve. Warring and his cohorts will be free in another six or eight months.

The fight to send the prisoners back to Atlanta was joined by Senator Ashurst (Democrat), Arizona; Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen and numerous other civic and official leaders.

Steele, the colored man who was included in last night's transfer, has already served 11 years of his 20-year sentence at Lorton.

For the fourth night in a row, 105 policemen from the day force returned to their beats last night. Maj. Brown said he was pleased with the success of the extra men at night but that it was exhausting the patrolmen, who are working 16 to 18 hours a day.

A mandatory life sentence on conviction of a fourth felony in the District was suggested yesterday by Representative Engel as a means of curbing crime. At recent appropriations hearings he was particularly interested in the plea of Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, for more policemen.

Acting U. S. Attorney Pine gave a warning to criminals as he set Wednesday for the trial of Ellis Tippett, 20, who pleaded "not guilty" to nine indictments. His brother, Ellsworth, 17, one of two "drunken bandits" who terrorized Washington ten days ago by seven robberies in one evening, pleaded guilty when arraigned before Justice Jesse C. Adkins.

Ellis claimed his brother got drunk and forced him to join in the holdups. He will face six charges of robbery, three charges of assault with intent to rob and a charge of assault with attempt to kill.

Pocketbook Trick Used.

Mary Ferguson, 40, colored, of 111 K street northwest, reported to police she was swindled out of her life savings of $290 earned as a charwoman, by two colored women yesterday. She said she had drawn the money from a postal savings account and was accosted by the women as she left and was made a victim of the scheme whereby money placed in a pocketbook will, it is explained, double itself.

Meanwhile a man suspected of being the "bluff bandit" was being held under $2,000 bond at the Hyattsville Jail last night pending a hearing Wednesday before Justice of the Peace John J. Fainter in connection with a holdup of a $15 gas station in Hyattsville yesterday.

He was Curtis J. Shawkey, 35, 3106 Nineteenth street northwest. Prince Georges County police said he admitted robbing Michael O'Brien, 2013 New Hampshire avenue northwest. O'Brien identified Shawkey, who was a friend of his.

Shawkey was arrested in front of another gas station by Privates R. A. Pearson and Henry C. Briscoe, of Prince Georges County. He was charged with holdup and robbery. He will also be questioned in Washington.

Lester Dixon, 25, of 1452 Foxhall road northwest, was held at the Seventh Precinct last night as Montgomery County police obtained a warrant charging him with armed robbery. He was arrested Wednesday by Precinct Detective Charles Carper, suspected of being the bandit who was hiring taxicabs and robbing their drivers on Conduit road. Montgomery County police said that O'Brien has been identified by one of the victims.

George He DeZerne, of 1333 Belmont road northwest, reported that while he was boxing at the Tenth Precinct Boys' Club, his pocketbook containing a driver's license and $5 was stolen from his locker.

Prince Georges County police early yesterday arrested six colored men, suspected of a series of robberies in Washington, after their car collided with another in Hyattsville, Md., near the police substation.

Admiral LeBreton To Be Commander Of Yangtze Patrol

Admiral Marquart, who was in command of the China River Squadron when the gunboat Panay was sunk in December, will take advanced instruction at the Naval War College, Newport, R. I.

The changes, described by the Navy Department as routine, are scheduled to take place early in March. Admiral Marquart has been in the Far East since 1935. He commanded the Sixteenth Naval District with headquarters at Cavite, P. I., until February, 1937, when he assumed command of the Yangtze Patrol.

Admiral LeBreton has been chief of staff for Admiral Arthur J. Hepburn, commander in chief of the United States Fleet, since June, 1936.

Rivers Group Backs Potomac Flood Control

Rivers

lowing the disastrous flood of last January, when property damage passed the $2,000,000 mark, the Maryland Legislature authorized Cumberland to float a $500,000 bond issue to finance its share of the control work's cost.

Maj. Walter D. Luplow, Army Engineer for this area, said last night that he will go to Cumberland Wednesday for a conference on the undertaking, which his office has been studying for several years. The project, which would be the most effective and extensive yet to be instituted in the Potomac Valley, calls for construction of concrete retaining walls, levees, channel diversion and bridge alterations.

The program embraces, besides Cumberland, Ridgeley, W. Va., and the area through which Wills Creek flows in Maryland, West Virginia and Pennsylvania.

The Congress voted that the project "is sound, needful and sufficiently advanced in status, and should be promptly constructed in the public interest."

"Meritorious," as applied to the Anacostia River basin flood control program, means that the congress "believes that although the project is not sufficiently advanced in status to warrant its present indorsement, it is meritorious and open for further consideration."

Heartily supported in principle by Prince Georges County citizens and officials, Representative Gambrill, the National Capital Park and Planning Commission and the Corps of Army Engineers, this undertaking is still under technical study. Alternate plans have been prepared by Maj. Ludlows office but the cost is still indefinite.

It is agreed by authorities that not only would the Prince Georges flood control scheme protect property and highways, reduce stream pollution and curb public health hazards but its adoption is a prerequisite to the proposed Baltimore-Annapolis-Washington boulevard.

The Rivers and Harbors Congress adopted without change a long list of resolutions submitted by the committee chairman, Representative John W. Boehne, jr., of Indiana.

Approval was given proposed Congressional authorization to divert sufficient water into the Illinois waterway from Lake Michigan to make the canal workable. That is the objective of the Parsons bill, upon which hearings are now being conducted by the House Rivers and Harbors Committee.

ARE EMPLOYERS IN FAVOR OF PENSION TAX?

The social security experiment is now a year old. For every dollar wage-earners have been taxed, employers have had to pay a dollar also. The Gallup Poll asked employers whether they were still in favor of social security—and asked wage-earners whether they thought employers should foot the entire pension tax. and produced an unbalanced general price structure.

After declaring his conferences with business executives were developing a better spirit of co-operation and understanding on all sides, the chief executive met with the automobile manufacturers and financiers.

In the group were Edsel Ford, of the Ford Motor Co.; K. T. Keller, president of the Chrysler Corporation; William S. Knudsen, president of General Motors Corporation; Alvin Macauley, head of the Automobile Manufacturers' Association and president of the Packard Motor Co.; John J. Schumann, president of General Motors Acceptance Corporation; Henry Ittleson, president of Commercial Investment Trust; A. E. Duncan, president of Commercial Credit Co.; Ernest Kanzler, president of Universal Credit Corporation, and B. E. Hutchinson, chairman of the Chrysler Corporation.

Seasonal Rise Expected.

Macauley acted as spokesmen and read this statement to reporters:

"We had a broad discussion of the factors affecting business and Government and we believe it was very helpful.

"We reported to the President that we are hopeful of a seasonal increase in sales in the spring that will bring about an improvement in business.

"We found ourselves in hearty agreement with the President's principles on the subject of installment selling. Properly used installment buying has and will continue to help millions of families to a higher standard of living with a corresponding increase in employment. But high pressuring customers or permitting their desires to take them into debt beyond their means is bad business all around.

"We agreed to meet and discuss among ourselves any possible improvement relating to the subjects discussed and to report back to the President."

Ford in Agreement.

He said no date had been fixed for the next meeting with Mr. Roosevelt, and insisted the question of so controlling production as to prevent periodic "ups" and "downs" in America's economic life was touched upon only briefly. Asked if Edsel Ford, whose company fought the old NRA and now is clashing with the Administration's labor policies, had concurred in his statement, Macauley said:

"Yes. Everyone did."

Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins was not as optimistic as the motor magnates. She reported factory employment last month dropped 530,000, the greatest December slump in 18 years, and said December weekly pay rolls were $19,600,000 smaller than in the same month in 1936. Describing the report as "pretty gloomy," Miss Perkins said it was "too early to say whether the favorable factors will outweigh the unfavorable."

At the same time, the Association of American Railroads reported freight car loadings for the week ended January 15 were 16.6 per cent below the corresponding week in 1937. A bright spot in the picture was the report of Commerce Department experts that the United States enjoyed an international trade boom last year which would shoot its foreign trade balance to more than $250,000,000.

Having obtained the opinions of big business on the slump, Mr. Roosevelt soon will confer with representatives of little business. He said he regarded the situation as a problem which affected not only industry but agriculture, transportation and other sectors of American life.

Thus, the President said he was seeking to bring various groups together to discuss their respective problems. He felt it was helpful that John L. Lewis, head of the Committee for Industrial Organization, sat down at the White House a few days ago with Owen D. Young, industrialist, and Thomas Lammont, banker, to review conditions.

Confusion Eradicated.

Some confusion among business leaders about the New Deal's various objectives has been cleared away by the conferences, Mr. Roosevelt said. He explained that there was no contradiction in his agricultural program, and noted that some industrialists believed heretofore that all legislation before Congress was prepared or sponsored by the White House.

Asked if he had noted labor's concern over his position that unions should be made more responsible in contractual relations, Mr. Roosevelt said his reference to the way Great Britain handled this problem was not intended as a recommendation that the British law be applied to American unions in its entirety. He was reminded that the British unions were prohibited from contributing to political campaigns and remarked that he only had proposed that the British system be studied. Lewis' United Mine Workers of America contributed $500,000 to Mr. Roosevelt's re-election campaign fund.

'Fair Partition' of Holy Land Necessary, Says Jews' Counsel

DR. BERNARD JOSEPH.

"Fair partition" of Palestine or effective British administration of the entire country are only satisfactory solutions to complex political problems of the Holy Land, according to Dr. Bernard Joseph, legal adviser to the Jewis Agency for Palestine.

Arriving in Washington yesterday to attend the two-day National Conference for Palestine, beginning today, Dr. Joseph denied that the British mandate is "unworkable."

If the mandate is abandoned, however, the Jews will require more than the 1,250,000 acres now assigned them by the partition plan, he said.

Asked how the British government could reconcile its war-time promises to both Arabs and Jews, the "attorney general" for Palestine's 450,000 Jews replied indignantly, "We don't agree that there were two promises."

"It isn't enough for the Arabs to say there was a promise to them. They were not in a position to extract a promise."

The Arabs, moreover, have already gained more from the World War than any other people, he asserted.

At present, he charged, Jews, totaling 30 per cent of the population, contributes 60 per cent of the country's revenue.

Their development of the country's resources also has increased by millions of pounds the value of Arab landlords' holdings, "and in return we get stabbed in the back," he added bitterly.

Mentioning several acts of Arab terrorism he has witnessed, Dr. Joseph recalled the fate of a Jewish friend, well known as an Arabic scholar, who was shot and killed while sitting at his desk, poring over an Arabic manuscript.

Marylander's Kin, 7 Others of U. S. Are Safe in China

Boston, Jan. 21 (AP).—Ending two months of anxiety, a telegram from Secretary of State Hull today informed the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions that nine Americans were "safe and well" in Taiku, North China. One of them is the son of a former Secretary of the Navy.

The board had not received a report of the Americans since November 21, when Japanese army officers said all foreigners were safe in Taiku.

The board listed the following as being in Taiku: Miss Gladys M. Williams, daughter of Mrs. Alice M. Williams, of Oberlin, Ohio; Dr. Leonard F. Wilbur, son of Curtis D. Wilbur, of San Francisco, former Secretary of the Navy; Mr. Leonard F. Wilbur and their two children, Ruth, 4, and Lyman, 2; Mrs. Willoughby A. Hemingway, mother of Mrs. Adelaide Truesdale, of Silver Spring, Md.; Miss Isabel Hemingway, of the Taiku Hospital; the Rev. Philip D. Dutton, father of Thomas C. Dutton, of Oberlin, Ohio; Ray T. Moyer, son of Mrs. Emma T. Moyer, Lansdale, Pa.

U. S. Vessel Answering Greek Ship's S O S Call

Boston, Jan. 22 (Saturday) (AP).—Coast Guard headquarters reported today that the steamer Black Heron had radioed at 12:14 a. m. (Eastern standard time) that an S O S call from the Greek freighter Kalypso Vergotti was "being cared for."

House Speeds Housing Bill to Senate Tie-up

Housing

Representative Hamilton Fish, of New York, rose to support the report, expressing "hope it will pass by a very large vote."

There was no record vote on passage, but the "ayes" overwhelmed a scattering of "noes."

The bill places a "ceiling" of $3,000,000,000 on the aggregate of mortgages that could be insured under the act. Purchasers of $6,000 homes could buy them with 10 per cent down and 25 years to amortize FHA-insured mortgages. Insured mortgages on this type of small construction would carry 5 per cent interest, with an additional ¼ of 1 per cent to pay for insurance.

90 Per Cent Insurance.

These $6,000 homes could be insured up to 90 per cent of the value of the mortgages. Costlier $10,000 homes would be subject to 90 per cent insurance on the first $6,000 and 80 per cent on the remaining $4,000. Homes costing between $10,000 and $16,000 would be subject only to 80 per cent insurance.

Two separate "multi-family" building aids would permit construction of projects costing between $16,000 and $200,000 with mortgages insured at 80 per cent. Limited-dividend and closely regulated institutions could build large scale projects costing up to $5,000,000, under 80 per cent FHA insurance. Both types of mortgages would bear interest at 5 per cent, plus insurance charges ranging from ½ of 1 per cent to 1 per cent, at FHA discretion.

Formation of national mortgage associations would be encouraged by the bill, with authority for them to issue debentures at 20 times paid in capital and to make directly any type of loans insurable by the FHA.

Va. Dance Honors Lee and Jackson

Upward of 400 members of the Virginia Society of Washington last night heard eulogies of Generals Lee and Jackson from Senator Josh Lee, of Oklahoma, and Judge Don P. Halsey, of Lynchburg, Va., as the highlights of the society's annual dance celebrating the birth anniversaries of the two leaders.

Judge Halsey, as a member of the Virginia State Senate, wrote the resolution under which the State presented the statues of Lee and Washington to the Capitol here. His address last night emphasized the ending of sectional feeling in the country. Senator Lee's remarks were emotional, eulogistic.

"Lee was as great in defeat as in victory," he said. "He received both Cerro Gordo and Appomattox with the sublime calm of a gentleman."

Col. Edwin A. Halsey, president of the society, introduced the speakers. Other officers of the society are Gen. Hugh S. Cumming, first vice president; Melvin C. Hazen, second vice president; Schuyler Otis Bland, third vice president; Fred P. Myers, treasurer, and I. Chance Buchanan, secretary.

IBM CONFERENCE TO STUDY WORLD-WIDE BUSINESS METHODS

Members of the International Business Machines Corporation, Washington branch, are leaving for New York to attend conferences to be held at the Company's World Headquarters Building, Madison Avenue and 57th Street. At this conference studies will be made of the best methods of bookkeeping, statistical records, time systems, cost keeping and general business procedures as applied to industry, finance, government, state and municipal agencies. They will also visit the International factory, research laboratories and schoolhouse at Endicott, New York.

Mr. Davila's Departure.

Widespread regret is aroused in Washington by the departure of Charles A. Davila, Rumania's able and popular Minister to the United States. In his eight years of service here, Mr. Davila has made a host of friends who will miss both his personal charm and opportunity of contact with a mind so competent to analyze and clarify the trend of international problems.

Since his resignation occurred before the recent political changes in Rumania, it cannot be asserted that Mr. Davila's departure is a direct consequence of the advent of the anti-democratic and anti-Semitic Goga government. Officially, it is solely for personal reasons that Mr. Davila has terminated his diplomatic career. But being a man of democratic instincts and convictions and one who undoubtedly foresaw the disturbing trend of events in Rumania, it is easy to surmise that the political situation in his homeland had something to do with his decision.

Since Premier Goga took power at Bucharest, some of the fears aroused by his elevation have tended to subside. Thus far Rumania has made no about-face in its foreign policy by joining the Berlin-Rome axis. And the anti-Semitic program of the new regime may prove in application less extreme than in ostensible intent.

It cannot be denied, however, that the shift in Rumania, for which the monarch himself is largely responsible, has very far-reaching possibilities. The fact that King Carol now has dissolved Parliament, and ordered a new election on the heels of that held only a few weeks ago, indicates a determination to keep Goga in office by supplying him with the parliamentary support he now lacks. There is an ominous ring in the prediction of Dr. Julius Maniu, the Rumanian democratic leader, that these elections will be conducted with "terrorism, corruption and illegality."

As this statement indicates, the democratic elements in Rumania are showing no disposition to surrender to totalitarianism. They are closing their ranks, as the recent union of the two liberal parties attests. This increase in tension adds interest to a report that after his return to Rumania, Mr. Davila may go into politics. Certainly his country has never had greater need of active participation in public affairs of the type of man represented by its departing Minister to the United States.

Rescue Of The Housing Bill.

The housing bill has been approved by the House of Representatives after emerging from conference shorn of the Lodge amendment providing for the payment of prevailing wage rates on buildings covered by Federally insured mortgages. With this deletion, the conference measure became a satisfactory bill which the Senate also is expected to approve without delay.

Acceptance of the amendment would have resulted in "freezing" wage rates in the building industry at existing levels in communities where material and labor costs are already so high that new undertakings are discouraged. Furthermore, it would have made the system of Federal insurance of mortgages unworkable, because banks and investment institutions would have been unwilling to lend, knowing that insurance on mortgage loans might be invalidated by violations of prevailing wage provisions beyond their control.

Indorsement of the Lodge proposal by the building trades unions and the A. F. of L. provides fresh evidence of the short-sightedness of organized labor in clinging to uneconomically high wage scales which cut down the amount of employment offered and actually reduce earnings. Since it is generally conceded that high labor costs are one of the major deterrents to revival of construction activity, it is obvious that any statutory prohibitions upon downward adjustments of such costs would be detrimental to the interests of labor itself.

It has frequently been pointed out that the housing bill is designed to stimulate private construction activities by improving the mortgage system and attracting more funds into the industry. It does not authorize direct Federal financing, nor does it provide subsidies to supplement private resources.

As Franklyn Waltman pointed out recently in his column, Politics And People, the Lodge amendment would have imposed upon a private industry legal standards of wages—a most unprecedented proceeding. Such an attempt to dictate the terms of purely private wage agreements would, if permitted, lead to demands for similar Government interference in other industries, benefited or regulated in any way by Federal law.

Senator Lodge has announced that he will move to reinsert his amendment when the conference bill reaches the floor of the Senate. For that reason it is important to be on guard against any attempt at last-minute sabotaging of the Administration's housing program. For that would be the inevitable consequence of passing the bill with the Lodge amendment attached.

The Issue Grows More Clear.

Support for the anti-lynching bill has been built upon the assumption that the end sought justifies the undemocratic means proposed. Every legislator knows that the country as a whole abhors mob murder. And a great many of them seem to have taken it for granted that even the most short-sighted attack upon the problem would, therefore, be popular with the public.

Results of the poll conducted by the American Institute of Public Opinion indicate that public support for the anti-lynching bill has been greatly exaggerated. Last November, 70 per cent of the citizens polled were in favor of a law making lynching a Federal crime. But the recent questionnaire, centered on two provisions of the bill now before the Senate, brought approving votes from only 53 per cent of those polled. The South, the Rocky Mountain and Pacific Coast States are all definitely opposed to the measure.

It is important to note, also, that this poll was taken during the early part of the Senate debate on the bill. In other words, many opinions were recorded before the real issue involved had emerged as clearly as is the case today. No doubt a majority were under the misapprehension that the Federal Government can step in and put an end to lynching without in any way affecting the relationship between national and local authorities.

Different results might also have been obtained if the Institute had more fully explained the bill. One of two questions citizens were asked is whether they approve a measure giving the Federal Government power to "fine and imprison local policemen who are negligent in protecting a prisoner from a lynch mob." Actually the bill would also permit Federal prosecution of Governors and other State officials who might be suspected of laxity in lynching cases. It would constitute a far more fundamental encroachment upon the rights of States to control their own affairs than is indicated by the A. I. P. O. questionnaire.

When these factors are taken into account, it is reasonable to suppose that a full explanation of the incompatibility of the bill with the American system of government would bring a decided public reaction against it. Despite the general detestation of lynchings, the average citizen would not risk an undermining of State sovereignty in order to hasten solution of a crime problem which the States are mastering without Federal intervention.

There is ground for hope that this growing tendency to consider the anti-lynching bill realistically may result in its displacement in favor of more important legislation awaiting approval in the Senate. Certainly the Senate is more disposed to discount the emotional arguments behind the bill than it was at the beginning of the session. If the opposition could effectively dissociate itself from such filibustering as Senator Ellender's six-day speech, the chance for success would be still further improved.

Speeches that bristle with race prejudice are the most effective argument that can be made in favor of Federal intervention to punish lynchers. Ill advised though it is, this bill represents a sincere effort to strike at the flagrant injustices tolerated by some sections of the South. When Senator Ellender takes six days to defend the background of prejudice on which that injustice is based, the effect is to sabotage the cause he pretends to support.

Ground already won may soon be lost unless this sort of argument is completely discarded and the debate once more directed to the basic weakness of the bill. The Senate, of course, should decide to leave local problems for the States to handle. But it cannot afford to be put in the position of acquiescing in bigotry.

The Airport Debate.

The twelfth year of debate on the District airport question has begun. As with all its predecessors, special interests and preconceived notions obscure the essential arguments. Unless and until these distractions can be overridden, the prospects for an improved Washington landing field seem slim.

In the meantime, the city can only pray for continued protection from that benign spirit which patently has watched over the Capital's air traffic as it has maneuvered over the short runways and other hazards of the present airport.

Last year the Senate accepted the recommendations of a special commission and voted approval for Camp Springs, in nearby southern Maryland, as the site for an improved and permanent airport. The bill failed of action in the House. Both chambers agreed to a corollary proposal which might have rehabilitated the existing field pending development of facilities at Camp Springs. But this was vetoed by the President, who voiced a preference for Gravelly Point as the site for a permanent airport. Fastening on Mr. Roosevelt's words, proponents of that site have now introduced a bill to authorize its reclamation and use. Supporters of the Camp Springs plan, however, declare themselves unalterably opposed to any substitute proposals.

Their attitude is to be regretted. It is just such unyielding refusals to view the problem objectively that have stalemated to date Washington's hopes for a safer landing field. Objections raised by the Navy, airline operators and the President all testify that the Camp Springs site is not without its shortcomings. In view of them, both fair play and common sense demand unprejudiced consideration of alternative proposals.

Problem Of Demarcation.

Criticism of the WPA order removing men eligible for unemployment insurance from work-relief rolls has been heeded by Mr. Aubrey Williams. The sharp criticism of the order voiced to the acting WPA administrator by John L. Lewis has been followed by postponement of its effective date. That delay affords opportunity for dispassionate examination of the problems raised by overlapping work relief and insurance payments.

Exception may be taken to the assertion of Mr. Lewis that the order was issued on "a completely inadequate excuse." It is said to result in part from the very rational law which prevents any individual from drawing compensation from two or more Government pay rolls simultaneously. While it would be logical for the courts to construe insurance payments as immune from this ban, there is room for doubt on the point.

Apart from the legal aspects of the matter, however, it would obviously be unfair to retain on WPA pay rolls any man who is drawing adequate benefits under the unemployment insurance laws of any State. On the other hand, there is reason to complain when insurance benefits are not sufficient to maintain those dropped from work-relief rolls. A further hardship arises from the statutory waiting period before those eligible for insurance benefits can actually receive payments.

Countries where unemployment insurance is long established have frequently been forced to transfer insured persons to relief rolls when their earned benefits run out or become inadequate. The problem at issue in this country is the reverse—how to shift men who are on relief to an insurance basis. This is due to the fact that we are just starting insurance payments, and doing so at a time of heavy unemployment. In all probability not many men now on WPA rolls have had sufficient private employment during the past year to qualify for insurance payments.

For those cases of hardship resulting from substitution of small and inadequate benefits for WPA work, it should be possible to make provision. They are in better circumstances than the destitute unemployed, of whom Washington has so many, who have neither WPA jobs nor benefits. The important point in the problem is to remember always that unemployment insurance benefits are received as a matter of right by the unemployed as a result of contributions paid in their behalf while at work.

It is essential to realize the sharp line of demarcation between the insured and the recipients of relief. And under normal conditions we should expect the former to be the favored group, since they do not lose their self-supporting status. The development of a work-relief system which provides jobs comparing favorably in many cases with those offered by private employers has, however, resulted in making the relief status seem preferable. That is one fundamental cause of the present difficulty.

As work relief is curtailed and unemployment insurance gets into full operation, the problem will be much less complicated. Then it will be easier to see the vital distinction between earned benefits paid the competent but temporarily unemployed and relief payments of indefinite duration made to support those unable to show competence for private employment.

Unchanging Scotland Yard.

Everyone remembers, or at least everyone ought to remember, how Sherlock Holmes demonstrated for all time that fingerprints can be faked and are therefore a most fallible agency in the detection of crime.

Memory of the place and circumstance of Holmes' specific achievements unfortunately grows a trifle dim. But at a guess it was in the London suburb of Norwood that the total inadequacy of fingerprint deduction was brought home to Dr. Watson. A builder who would have been better employed on housing projects took an impression of an innocent youth's finger by having him seal a document. And then the unscrupulous villain placed a fingerprint taken from the impression exactly where it would have been certain to incriminate, barring only the intervention of Sherlock Holmes.

Just this week, as related by a cable in the veracious New York Times, the identical procedure was used in a London police court by a suspect who thereby obtained acquittal on a charge of robbery. And this although "police experts," in advance of the demonstration, declared the suggestion of faked fingerprints "fantastic."

The experts must have been from Scotland Yard. They must have been the lineal descendants of Inspector Lestrade himself. And they must have caused good old Sherlock Holmes, if he is still raising bees in Sussex, to muse sorrowfully on his pitiful inability to improve, whether by suggestion, precept or example, the bungling methods of the official police.

"Olive Branch Again."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Can you blame utility officials for throwing their mitts in the air and yelling "What's the use? If you can't form some fixed policy in regard to utilities and stick to it overnight, buy us out—at your own price, on your own terms. But for Pete's sake, let's cut out the comedy!"

You can't blame utilities if they refuse to go ahead without assurance in black and white. Ditto for investors. I like utility bonds. Everybody uses light and power, the companies get their money, the users get value and steadily lower rates.

Everybody knows abuses crept into utility holding companies during the fools' paradise of the twenties. Since recurrence of this has been legislated against, most of this can be adjusted automatically. So why not lay off holding companies in interest of revived prosperity?

The President should get one of his multiple economic advisers to lay before him stockholders' lists which will indicate quite clearly that others than royalists are interested in this problem. Also they are not interested in post-mortems, but present remedies.

How about the olive branch again, but this time make it stick?

He's From Missouri.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I'm reading and enjoying that story of Clark Griffith's 50 years of baseball, but it seems to me as I read the second chapter, published on January 17, that either Clark has been pulling Shirley Povich's leg or Shirley is pulling the collective leg of The Post family of readers.

The Nats' manager is quoted as saying that one of his proudest moments was the time he licked his weight in wildcats when about 11 years old with the help of Major, one of the best coon dogs in those parts—back near Nevada, Mo.

Major did his part—treed the "coon." Clark shinned up the tree to do his part and ran into trouble, about 60 pounds of it. But after a furious, bloody battle, Clark won, and started down the road with the "coon" on his back when hailed by a neighbor:

"Lad, what you got there?"

"A great big coon. The biggest coon I ever did see."

"Hell, that ain't no coon. That's a wildcat."

Now I ask you: Is it reasonable to believe that a boy who had been helping earn the family living by trapping coons, 'possum, skunk and what not, out in Missouri, didn't know a coon when he saw one?

Or, worse, couldn't tell a coon from a wildcat even when he had to fight the cat at close quarters?

If that be true, I'll swear Clark Griffith was the only 11-year-old kid who ever lived in Missouri who lived to tell such a yarn.

Or maybe it's just the kind of a yarn no one but a Missourian would tell to that old Yankee, Povich.

Civil Service Appointments.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your editorial on the fifty-fifth anniversary of the establishment of the U. S. Civil Service Commission is very untimely. We indorse your attitude that "to attack is the best defense tactics." The Civil Service Commission is responsible for all its trouble with politicians, Congressmen, etc., in that it certifies the three highest eligibles for appointment. Here is where favoritism and political preference is invited by the very guardian of the merit system.

The executive who makes the appointment from the three certified eligibles is himself a political appointee and subject to political pressure and a debtor for past and prospective political favors. We can not expect that he will act otherwise than appoint the eligible with the greatest political backing.

We suggest that the U. S. Civil Service Commission adopt the method used by many foreign countries and by several American States, i. e., appoint the highest rated eligible on the Civil Service register.

Compulsory Patriotism.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The decision of the Federal district judge in Philadelphia that public school officials may not expel children for refusal to salute the flag because of religious convictions, was of profound importance to American citizens. It was a vindication for the sect known as Jehovah's Witnesses, which deems saluting the flag of any nation a form of obeisance due only the Almighty, and therefore a form of idolatry.

Whether the attitude and belief of Jehovah's Witnesses are right or wrong was not the point for the judge to settle. The question was whether religious convictions, right or wrong, should be respected in a country that guarantees religious freedom to all persuasions in its fundamental law. He decided that religious liberty was not derived from Government and should not be abridged by the Government, but should be protected.

The courts of California and Massachusetts have rendered similar decisions on this question of compulsory flag saluting in the public schools. If a few more State courts and Federal courts sustain similar decisions, it may put an end to the unseemly and embarrassing publicity to which the children of religious sects throughout the country have been subjected.

Pegler On Roosevelt.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: On January 19, the anniversary of the birth of one of the greatest of Americans, who was noted for his devotion to his mother as well as for his bravery and his executive ability, Mr. Westbrook Pegler, as spokesman for the "Alger boys," climaxed a column of carping criticism of the President by calling him "mama's boy." He lauds the Alger boys for helping their mothers.

I have never heard anyone accuse Mr. Roosevelt of being lazy. Both he and Mrs. Roosevelt have temperaments capable of finding pleasure in the simpler things of life. Certainly he could have earned enough through his own efforts to have supported his family adequately. If he has accepted enough from his mother to live more expensively, it has not been selfishly. Neither he nor Mrs. Roosevelt have lived lives of selfish indifference to those whose lives were more difficult.

Have Mr. Pegler and the Alger boys ever read the story of Lazarus and the beggar? This is generally interpreted as meaning that Lazarus was not condemned just because he was rich—Nicodemus and Joseph of Arimethea were also rich—but because he was indifferent to the sufferings of the beggar at his door. Mr. Roosevelt does not condemn men just because they are rich. He has many friends who are rich men. But he does condemn those who pile riches upon riches, indifferent to the injustice of the means by which those riches were gained. M. D.

Divorce For Dancers.

A French judge, Gaston Legoff, who has occupied himself chiefly with divorce proceedings, firmly believes that successful husbands are those who are poor dancers or those who cannot dance at all. Judge Legoff noticed time and again that those guiltless of a broken marriage belonged in these categories.

Early in his career the judge made a practice of asking his clients whether they were good or poor dancers. Carefully compiling his statistics, he found that there was a close connection between guilt in divorce and good dancing.

Young girls, says Judge Legoff, can profit by this finding and should beware of a good dancer. Even though he knows how to lead her through the most intricate steps of a dance, she should not deduce that in the dance of married life he will prove his worth and leadership as well.

Views On Anti-Lynching Legislation.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I desire to take this opportunity to express my sincere appreciation and gratitude to the Southern and some of the Western Senators who are making a strong and courageous protest against the enactment of the so-called anti-lynching bill.

Each time the Federal Government obtains a new power, it means that the State governments must yield that power to the Federal Government. The Federal Government does not represent the people in intrastate affairs. State governments represent the people, and when the States lose their sovereignty, this Government will become centralized, and the only thing that can result is dictatorship, and no one wants that.

The Federal Government represents the people in interstate affairs, foreign affairs and affairs specifically delegated to it by the Constitution. "The enumeration in the Constitution of certain rights, shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people," and "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people," (ninth and tenth amendments—U. S. Constitution).

From the above it should be clearly seen that the so-called anti-lynching bill would be unconstitutional were it to become law. Before a Senator takes his seat, he is required to take an oath to uphold and support the United States Constitution. Most of the Senators being lawyers, know that this bill would be unconstitutional, were it to become law, and it seems to me, therefore, that Senators voting for it or supporting it would be violating their oath of office. R. B. PRICE.
Washington, Jan. 20.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The opponents of the anti-lynching bill are extending their few feeble remarks over days and days of time that should be valuable for the country's welfare. Among the points that they reiterate in monotonous platitudes is to the effect that, since lynchings are decreasing numerically, the custom will sooner or later cease altogether. In the meantime, the sacred doctrines of States' rights will be preserved. Incidentally, the Southern States, which contribute such an infinitesimal part of the Federal income, have been far from backward in taking all they could get in the way of Federal expenditures within their borders.

The actual number of colored men murdered by the mobs has little to do with the gravity of the situation, however. As I write, there is before me a photograph of the dead body of a Negro, strung up because he was accused of "threatening and frightening a white woman." Within the picture are seven white children and several adults. It is a well-known fact, psychologically, that those youngsters may be damaged for life by the emotions aroused by the terrible sight, whether their reactions be in the nature of a hatred or of horror. The obverse of the photograph would portray colored children scurrying in terror to keep out of the way of the criminals that have hanged a man without trial. On the minds of the colored children will be fixed a fear complex that will never leave them.

The Post Impressionist

No Man's Land.

BEAUTY to the right, beauty to the left, beauty ahead—yet you mustn't stop to look, and you can't turn your car around. Once I thought there could be no greater bliss than to spend my days and nights beside the Potomac. Now I drive 4 miles along it twice in every 24 hours and scarcely get a glimpse of the river.

My sorrows with the Memorial highway began early in my experience of the road. I was coming out of Washington for a 2 o'clock engagement in Alexandria. At the south end of the Fourteenth Street Bridge I knew you turned the opposite way from the way you wanted to go, so I did—as soon as possible. The Capital was a strange city to me then, and I drew a sigh of relief at getting safely off its streets at last. Imagine, then, the disturbance in my insides when I found myself headed back to town.

So near and yet so far—I was on the right road, but headed in the wrong direction and traveling farther and farther from where I wanted to go. I gritted my teeth and drove all the way to the Lincoln Memorial. Now, I thought, it's over. All I have to do now is go back the way I came. I crossed what looked like the same bridge, when dusk seeped in I was miles out in Arlington County, where nobody could even tell me how to reach the Memorial highway. I retraced the road, rounded Lincoln's temple again and came to Alexandria as the lights began to twinkle. I was whimpering to myself.

Sundays I still whimper a little. I never have much time, and I have to drive the limit to arrive on schedule. With the outside line of traffic traveling at 20 miles an hour and the inside at 35, it's next to impossible for a busy person to get where he's going. Explorative pips with the horn seldom have any effect on the idler ahead who monopolizes the fast lane to pass slow cars at a speed hardly greater than theirs. At a prolonged blast, rather than move over he speeds up 5 miles an hour momentarily. You have to sit on the horn until you deafen him, and you may even have to turn your lights up in his mirror.

Once in a while you burst into the blessed open, where you encounter the waggle-tails. These cars drift over almost far enough to let you by, then dodge back in front of you. Often they take the outside lane and then turn at your running-board as you hurry past. It's the Pennsylvania and New Jersey autos, some say; the Georgia and South Carolina drivers are good. But I've found them all the same—they all straddle the line and they all waggle.

Then in summer there are those Sunday afternoon jams. I've seen the cars piled up all the way back of the underpass, and it's taken me 40 minutes to drive from the Fourteenth Street Bridge to E street. The only thing to do is to move 10 feet and stop; move up 10 feet and stop. You may read snatches from the paper, you may play the radio, if you have one; you may even be reduced to singing. One pastime is counting the number of States on the license tags—Michigan, North Carolina, Massachusetts, Ohio . . . I have never yet seen a driver indulge in conversation with the man who is stalled beside him. Frequently I've wanted to do just that—mutual grievance should draw strangers together.

Speed is always a problem. The park police cars are plainly and politely marked, so that only a fool would pass one of them. They don't bother you, folks say, unless you go over 50—50 is generally fast enough. The rumor has gone around that the road is in Virginia and therefore under Virginia law. The idea, the mongers of this rumor say, is to resist being carried to a District lock-up. When you come before a Virginia judge, they assert, he rules that limits in Virginia are merely advisory and dismisses the case. This procedure reportedly baffles the park police.

My guess is that one motorist may have got away with this prank, but that no more will. The technicalities of the law are not so temperable to the shorn public as they used to be. Moreover, the highway is now chopped up into segments which are alternately proclaimed to be in Virginia and the District.

When the white-painted signs appeared on the pavement, in three places, they had me confused at first. A white line runs the width of the street; huge block letters say "VA." on one side of the line and "D. C." on the other. I suspect that these divisions are still subject to dispute some day in the endless territorial war between Virginia and the District of Columbia.

In this aspect, as in others, the Memorial highway is no man's land. In the nullification of its beauty, much of its purpose has been violated. Yet it has its compensations, when at sunset one of the huge Douglases sweeps up over a hill, and a breath of river air blows in a window, and the lighted Capitol is ahead long enough for a driver to look.

Fair Enough

Not Many Interesting People.

THE SIGHT OF dark stretches of undeveloped land which still exist in some parts of New York City where the street lights are far apart, houses are isolated and the snow freezes in irregular ripples on the sidewalks reminds me of a phase of the newspaper business which is seldom mentioned. I mean the ordinary, routine, city side assignment which takes a reporter 'way out to hell-and-gone in pursuit of an angle of a big story which is centered at police headquarters or one of those two-headed calf items known as a feature.

PEGLER

The feature story may be something about some frowsy and dirty-handed old derelict living on the edge of a dump who claims to be a fallen star at the Milan Opera or an aide-de-camp of the Czar or some goofy hermit who lives on goat's milk and has notified the city desk that the world will come to an end at 9:15 p. m. next Tuesday. That type of thing.

It isn't the quality of the story, anyway. It is the drudgery of going after it in a strange part of town out at the end of the line, where it always turns out that the street in question is about a mile over that way and that to reach it by subway, "L" or street car it will be necessary to go back down to 149th street and change over and come up again. So the quickest thing to do is walk, and at the end of the walk some suspicious person, probably a foreigner, takes the reporter for a bill collector or subpoena server and refuses to open the door or listen to reason. Or if it is a police story of some kind and the person really has a story to tell he may get very distinguished in the enjoyment of a little flash of celebrity and say, "I have nothing to say for publication in the press." Or ask for $20.

So back to the subway and down to the shop with nothing accomplished by a job that took the better part of a day. No adventure. No shell-fire. No humorous happening with which to brighten the conversation at some shop talk later on. Nothing but a long ride, a long, cold walk across lots in the dark and perhaps a slightly skinned knee from tripping over a lot of cans in a dump and a report to the desk, who had forgotten all about it, anyway.

ONE OF my first assignments in New York was to camp on the front stoop of somebody on Fifth avenue to get a statement from Lindley Garrison, who had just quit his job as Wilson's Secretary of War. He holed up at this Fifth avenue house and for two days refused to say "Aye," "Yes" or "No" while 20 reporters picketed the place to be there when he should decide to chirp. It was a bitter winter, with a cold wind sweeping across the park, and that Garrison host wouldn't even let us into his coal hole to warm up. Early on the third day Garrison handed us little slips containing about 30 words, which we phoned downtown, and that was the story. By that time his say didn't matter, so for all our patience all we got was about a No. 1 head back near the Bulgarian communique, via Berlin (delayed).

Brooklyn is a terrible maze. Nobody seems to know how to get around Brooklyn, and the natives apparently just follow their respective grooves to and from work and know nothing about other neighborhoods in the boroughs. Once Rodney Dutcher and I went to Brooklyn at 9 in the morning after working until 4 a. m. to attend the funeral of a fellow worker in our shop. We gave ourselves plenty of time, but we were shuttled around by policemen and natives with false directions to Protestant cemeteries and Jewish cemeteries and monument works, until about 1 o'clock we finally found the Catholic cemetery and our friend's grave. The family were gone, and they probably think to this day that nobody among his friends in the shop turned out.

PICTURE CHASING used to be a depressing job, too. We used to canvass all the photographers' shops in person and the friends of the accused or the victim in quest of any sort of little shot, and many a day's work went for absolutely nothing.

The most successful picture chaser I ever heard of was an absolute wizard. He always got his picture, but one day a lawyer for a nice young girl sent the management a mash note demanding $100,000 for libel for using her picture as that of a girl mixed up in some dirty scandal. Then it came out that the wizard had entree to the picture morgue of an obscure neighborhood photographer and would just lift a suitable picture for each assignment. Goodness knows how much libel he had caused before the expose, but the paper quietly settled with this girl and then prosecuted him.

But it isn't the work, the cold and the uncertainty that make these assignments to the 'way-off goat barrens so depressing; the worst of it is when the guy on the desk says, "Keep it to a hundred. Tight paper."

An English View Of George VI.

KING GEORGE VI has already won our confidence. He has already shown us that he has a will of his own; that he's not in the least tardy in showing indignation when he's displeased. The virtues he pursues may be quiet, but they will not be negative; and it is wholly certain that he will not suppress his will—at least what one might describe as a genteel attempt not to offend. The art in being a constitutional monarch is in knowing when to be an autocrat. Queen Victoria knew this art well, and she practiced it frequently. Neither was King George without occasional bursts of sound independence. British people will never resent the exercise of the King's will. The knowledge that it exists strengthens their confidence in him.

• • • •

I AM NOT naturally a timid person, but I am shy in talking to you about the King. I am a monarchist to this extent. I believe that Cromwell was right—but I would have fought and died for Charles I. I am therefore an unreasonable person on this subject because it is as deep-rooted with me as religion. But I can still sweep my feelings aside, examine the story of the past year and say that a miracle began in Westminster Abbey when the Four Knights of the Garter held the lordly canopy of gold over King George VI. His isolation from mankind seemed to be complete in that moment as he sat within the shade of the pall of the tabernacle in which he was remote from man and alone with God.

• • • •

IN THE DAYS that followed, those who worked close to the King noticed the change that had come to him almost over night. It was as if the prayers of his people had been truly answered. His confidence grew—his calm dignity of purpose. The ministers were surprised, when they went to see him, by the growing strength of his will. One of his cousins was in the room with him one day where he was working at his desk. She said afterward, "It is surprising to watch him—the movements of his hands—the way he touches things and writes. It is the same as his father."

Future Of Palestine

Visitor Sees Problem Of The Holy Land Now Involving All Peoples And Nations Of The Near East.

Jerusalem.

GREAT BRITAIN'S royal commission, after a careful study of the situation, came to the conclusion that there was an "irreconcilable clash" between Jew and Arab and proposed the partition of Palestine. The British government accepted the plan. The Zionist Congress and the Jewish Agency, by a majority vote, accepted the principle of partition. The Permanent Mandates Commission reluctantly agreed, as did the Council of the League of Nations.

But the Palestinian Arabs indignantly rejected this solution and the terrorism, which had been stopped, broke out again with new strength.

For all purposes Palestine is now the theater of a real civil war. The newspapers of America and Europe often give information of murder, bomb throwing and even real battles. The Palestine newspapers report outrages every day. But even a complete list of victims will bring only a partial picture of the situation. One must go to the country to realize how strained the situation is.

Invisible Bars Divide Jew And Arab Populations.

JEWS AND ARABS live throughout Palestine in neighboring towns, neighboring settlements, neighboring quarters. Today an invisible but effective boundary which Jews dare not cross separates these towns, quarters and neighboring settlements. No Jew will be seen in the Arab town of Jaffa, which practically merges with the Jewish town of Tel-Aviv; no Jew in the Arab town of Ramleh between Tel-Aviv and Jerusalem; no Jew in Bethlehem, a few miles from Jerusalem; no Jew in Acta, a few miles from Haifa.

No Jew dares enter the Arab quarters of Jerusalem, and though the port of Jaffa is only about 60 kilometers from Jerusalem, all Jews disembark at Haiffa, which is 180 kilometers away. No Jew will be seen in an Arab bus (there are double bus lines—one Arab and one Jewish); no Jew in a taxi driven by an Arab.

On the roof of the University of Jerusalem there are sandbags to protect the building from bullets and the entire premises are surrounded by barbed wire. Jewish settlements are sometimes surrounded by trenches, and the buildings on the corners have special openings for machine guns.

The British government is now fighting this new wave of terror with energy. Leaders have been arrested and the chief—the Mufti Amin el Husseini—has fled. Military reinforcements have been sent and regular battles are occurring. Heavy fines are imposed on Arab villages and the courts-martial do not shrink from inflicting capital sentences.

Optimists in Palestine explain the postponement of the sending of the commission, which was to produce the complete scheme of partition, by the desire in London to pacify the country before the commission begins its work. This optimism, however, seems hardly justified. It appears rather—and here lies the crux of the whole question—that behind this display of force there is no definite policy. It appears that the British government hesitates to stick to the policy of partition and to enforce it against the will of the Arab population.

Grand Mufti In Exile Still Directs Arab Policy.

THE MUFTI is in exile. Technically he is a criminal who fled before his arrest. But from his exile he continues to direct the whole policy of resistance and terror, and his authority over the Palestine Arabs is perhaps even stronger than it was before. Moreover, there are persistent rumors that—directly or indirectly—negotiations between the Mufti and the British government have started.

If these rumors were true it would mean that the partition plan has not only been shelved, but practically abandoned. It would mean that the terrorism has succeeded in forcing London to reconsider its position.

This intervention of the Arabs outside of Palestine started in 1936 with the acceptance by the British of Noury Said, former foreign minister of Iraq and one of the leaders of Panarabism, as a kind of mediator, and the acceptance of the appeal of the Arab kings to the Palestine Arabs to call off the general strike.

It may be that at the time the British government had considered these interventions merely as emergency measures, as a tactical move to appease the situation. It soon appeared, however, that these interventions marked the transformation of the Palestine problem into a problem of international policy in the Near East, a problem of concern to Iraq, as well as to the Hedjaz and even to Egypt.

Arab World Too Diverse To Provide United Front.

OF COURSE, notwithstanding the slogan of Panarabism, a completely united front of all Arab states is hardly to be expected, as the positions and interests are too divergent.

First of all, there is an Arab state, or at least an Arab ruler, who personally would benefit by the partition scheme, and therefore, could be reasonably supposed to be favorable to it. He is Amir Abdullah, of Transjordania, who would be King of the Arab Palestine also. But this fact does not carry much weight. The British did not succeed in building up the position of Amir Abdullah. He is considered in the Arab world as a British tool, and his influence outside of Transjordania is virtually nil. Moreover, the aggrandizement of Transjordania is unacceptable to the King of Iraq, as well as to Ibn Saoud, both enemies of Abdullah. And one may be fairly certain that this portion of the original plan, the union of Arab Palestine and Transjordania, is already abandoned.

For all practical purposes—notwithstanding the strong speech of the Egyptian Foreign Minister, Wacyf Ghalil Pasha, in the League Assembly—Egypt can also be eliminated. The Egyptians have enough worries of their own, and they are too dependent on British help against the Italian danger to play a very conspicuous role. Moreover Egypt is connected with the Arab world culturally rather than politically. The ambition of the Egyptians is to be the intellectual center of the Arab-speaking—nay, of the whole Moslem—world, but hardly any responsible Egyptian thinks today of Egypt even as a member, let alone a leading member, of an Arab federation.

Thus, notwithstanding the fact that Cairo is the seat of the Syro-Palestinian committee and that Egyptian intellectuals affirm that they are as interested in what happens to their brothers in Syria and Palestine as in what is happening in Egypt, one can leave Egypt out of the picture.

For different reasons one can also eliminate the Yemen, which is too obvious and strongly under Italian influence to be a decisive factor for the policy of Great Britain.

Syria is not yet independent and is also irreconcilable. For the Syrians, Palestine continues to be southern Syria—a part of their land.

Thus, if Great Britain wants to stick to its plan and to enforce the partition, it must obtain at least the friendly neutrality of Iraq and/or Saoudi Arabia.

Difficult To Ascertain Direction Behind Scheme.

WHO IS conducting the negotiations and how they are conducted is of course impossible to ascertain. There were rumors that certain quarters in London contemplated to offer the crown of the future Arab Palestine to a Saoudite prince, or to Ibn Saoud himself.

This solution would present a paramount difficulty. The saoudites are Wahabites—a kind of Arab Puritans—and the Palestinian Arabs would hardly care to be ruled by a prince of this particular sect.

Others believe that a complete change of boundaries of the future states, severing the Jewish Palestine from the Lebanese frontier, giving to the Arab state the orange groves south of Jaffa and connecting Jaffa with Iraq by a strictly Arab corridor, while giving to the Jews part of the desert of Negeb, might lift the Iraqian opposition.

All of this, nevertheless, while based on certain facts, is mere speculation.

The facts are these: The question of the partition of Palestine is no longer a question between the Council of the League, the mandatory power, the Palestine Jews and the Arabs. It has become a part of the whole Near Eastern policy of Great Britain, an item in the intricate game of world politics.

Consequently, the solution of the Palestine question by the termination of the mandate and the creation of two states in Palestine, while retaining a part under a permanent mandate, which in September, 1936, appeared so certain that only the modalities of partition seemed under discussion, appeared in December, 1937, only as one, and not even the most probable, of possibilities.

This creates an extremely serious economic and political position in Palestine. To quote one Jewish leader: "The British Empire can wait for the solution of the Palestinian problem. For us an indefinite delay may mean a catastrophe."

The French Crisis And Europe.

THERE IS a good deal of truth, but no small measure of wishful thinking as well, in the German contention that the latest political crisis in France has considerably weakened that nation's influence in Europe.

Obviously the Berlin government would be more than pleased if this actually proved to be the case. When all is said and done it is France, rather than any other great power, which the Third Reich regards as its chief enemy.

That point was made flat-footedly by Hitler in his autobiography. It remains, despite appearances to the contrary, the central point in the foreign policy of the Nazi regime.

TO BE SURE there is only the remotest possibility of any direct German attack on France, now or in the near future. The fact is realized in Berlin that the French defense system today is far superior to what it was in 1914. Moreover, there is no longer any doubt, as there was then, that in the event of a German aggression on France, Great Britain would come to the latter's assistance. Definite assurances to that effect were given last year when Great Britain and France signed a treaty of alliance.

That is why it was no hardship whatever for Hitler to promise Belgium that Germany would refrain from violating the little kingdom's new-found neutrality. It was, in fact, a decided advantage to the Third Reich to be assured that Belgium would not join any combination directed against her.

But if not a direct attack, what other form can German hostility to France take?

THE ANSWER to this question is to be found in the circumstance that now, as at all times since the end of the World War, the French support the maintenance of the status quo in Europe. And as long as that status quo is maintained, even in its present uncertain and unstable form, Germany's territorial ambitions on the continent will be thwarted.

The attack on France, therefore, has primarily taken the form of an attack on the status quo. But the reverse has also been true. Insofar as Germany has upset the peace treaty arrangements, she has weakened France. And the more the situation is changed to Germany's advantage, the weaker France's position will be.

No wonder, then, that Germany has sought by every means possible to isolate France, to rob that nation of her allies, and to extend German influence in areas that once looked to France for guidance and support. Such a program, if successful, would reduce France to the status of a second-class power and place her completely at the mercy of her neighbor from across the Rhine.

WITH ALL this in mind the real purpose of the anti-Communist campaign of the Third Reich becomes clear. For while ostensibly directed against Russia it is actually directed against France. Its immediate objective is to destroy the Soviet Union's alliance with France on the one hand and with Czechoslovakia on the other while, at the same time, preventing the establishment of good relations between Russia and Rumania. For the same reason Germany has tried with might and main, and by no means unsuccessfully, to weaken France in Poland and Yugoslavia. In the later aspect it has had the support of Italy.

Now the fact is very clear that as long as France gives the impression of weakness, its allies will seek to make reinsurance arrangements with the Fascist powers. This is precisely the meaning of Poland's 1934 treaty with Germany and Yugoslavia's agreement of last year with Italy. It is also reflected in the recent visit to Berlin of Foreign Minister Beck of Poland and Premier Stoyadinovitch of Yugoslavia.

BUT GERMANY may be banking too much on France's internal difficulties to advance the Third Reich's interests in Europe. Political crises are nothing new in the French Republic. In the 67 years since its foundation more than 100 governments have held office there.

Despite all this surface confusion, however, French foreign policy has remained singularly consistent over long periods. Thus after 1895, the alliance with Czarist Russia was maintained unimpaired even though radical statesmen succeeded conservatives at the helm of affairs and vice versa.

This continuity of policy is manifested in the interesting circumstance that there have been far fewer foreign ministers than premiers in the 67 years of the republic. In France, as in many other lands, politics have stopped at the water's edge. And in this connection it is certainly of importance that Yvon Delbos has headed the foreign ministry in all three of the cabinets that have held office since the Popular Front election victory of May, 1936.

THE FACT of the matter is that foreign policy in France reflects only to a minor degree the attitude of the individual, the party or the coalition that happens to be in power. To a very much greater extent it reflects the nation's basic aims in international affairs. And those aims can be pursued with almost the same degree of force in times of internal crisis as in times of internal peace.

France today is unquestionably passing through a critical period. The present government is admittedly of the stop-gap variety. It may fall overnight; it is hardly likely to last any great length of time. But no change in its foreign policy is likely for the time being.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips
Washington Conference.

The President—Somehow I get the distinct feeling there is a lack of complete trust and confidence at these conferences.

First Business Man—I noticed that, too, but I thought I was just sitting in a draft.

Second B. M.—We are willing to go along with you, Mr. President, but would like to get some idea of the direction and destination.

President—You industrialists get credit for being bold and daring, yet you insist on traveling only well-lighted roads.

Third B. M.—We don't insist on walking on well-lighted roads but on the other hand we don't want to be caught dancing in the dark.

President (impatiently)—What difference does it make what the destination is so long as the direction is forward?

First B. M.—None . . . until you come to an open bridge.

President—You business men are cold to changes. Your eyes are closed to new trends.

Third B. M.—Our eyes are not closed; they only look that way from all the punches we've had to take in the face lately. All we ask is to know what your goal is.

President—I have told you lots of times what my goal is.

Second B. M.—Yes, but you are always moving back the goal posts.

President—Gentlemen, I am offering you the right hand of fellowship.

Fourth Conferee—We seem to be stymied here. Just what is the point of all this?

President—The point is that I am giving you a chance to wash your sins away.

Fifth Conferee—Yes, but you want to make us use Government soap!

President—You just don't want to come clean with me.

President (a little hopelessly)—I know you boys think I'm your enemy but I'm really your best friend.

A Voice—Wanna bet?

President—Despite what you may think, I am trying seriously to be a good President.

Several Conferees—Well, you're the best since Hoover!

President—I tell you it's up to you to put your shoulders to the wheel!

President—The trouble with business is that it is selfish when it should be generous and big-hearted.

Fourth B. M.—Don't forget that it's the stockholders' money. It is not easy to be big-hearted with other people's dough.

President—I can't escape the conclusion that you boys lack vision. You must STRIKE off the dark glasses of reactionism. You must STRIKE off the shackles of precedent. You must STRIKE.

Tom McCarthy

Pity The Sports Writer's Wife.

"MOTHERS-IN-LAW," said the little lady, "aren't even in the running with what's threatening to break up my home life. I mean, you know how things are. People get married. They're sure it's all for the best. But they marry a guy . . . not a family . . . or a mother-in-law.

McCARTHY.

"Now, I'm not complaining, but I thought I'd married the guy. But it turned out I married the American League. Or maybe I just married baseball."

She was as nice a looking little woman as you'd ever want to see. And she wasn't the "whiney" type at all. It was just that she'd been pressed too far. She had, in short, been imposed upon. She was a sports writer's wife.

"Somebody," she said, "has to tell our story. I mean, we're a group. We're much in the same position as public enemies. And yet I'm sure we're ordinary people who just like the guys we married, and want to get along with other people, too."

It wouldn't have taken a guy half as perceptive as myself to figure all that out. She was convincing.

"You see," she said, "I may as well give you the background of the whole situation. I may as well go back beyond the days when I was a sports writer's wife. I'll go back to the time, when I was a sports writer's girl. I should have realized what I was in for, even then.

"It all began, back in '29. That was the year of the crash. No, I'm not talking about my meeting the Mister. That was also the year that Chicago and Philadelphia had a series of ball games. No, I can't pin it down more than that. I'm a sports writer's wife—not a writer.

"Well, he told me that he'd have a date with me . . . if Chicago won the series. So I sat home by the fire. Well, not actually by the fire, but I sat home. I was loyal and devoted. He would breeze into town if Chicago won.

"I don't want to let the cat out of the bag, and give him any ideas, but I will admit I did call the newspaper office a couple of times to find out how the game was going. And everything looked good.

"Chicago was leading, and the date was in the bag. Sure, we were going to have a big time. We were going to paint the town red. And then, Philadelphia made ten runs in the ninth! That established a record. And he had to go back to Philadelphia for the finish of the series. The date was out.

"Well, that should have been the tip-off. But it wasn't . . . I married him!

"No, I'm not complaining. I think he's a swell guy. But after all, I married him . . . not the sports department . . . or the American League.

• • • •

WHAT I'm kicking about is the entire set-up. Now, other wives say, O. K. dear, we'll have the Smithers in on Saturday.' But I can't say that. I have to look it up.

"I have to say, 'Yes, I know we ought to have the Smithers in on Saturday, but wait till I look at the schedule.'

"You see the American League schedule is my Bible. I can't see my husband except at the home games. I can't plan a party unless the Nats are playing at home.

"We get the schedule for the year, when we go South for spring training. Then I try to figure out just when I can see my husband, and pay back the people we owe for their parties.

"Sure, I admit that going South every winter is pretty nice. And I admit that the husband has a lot easier job than the ball players who have to work-out all day. And that in some ways that trip South every winter is fine.

"I like to sit around on the hotel porch and play bridge or hearts, as much as the next one. But there's another side to it. You see the girls that are married to nice, ordinary people like Government workers can go out dancing at night. They can go to a live Southern town. But I go to one where everybody goes to bed at 10, because the team has got to keep training.

"I go out and sit on the porch, and discuss knitting and such, with the ball players' wives . . . but they're afraid to talk shop, before me. And when I come down to the porch I never know which ones are going to speak to me.

"You see, maybe they've seen my husband's report before I have. And maybe he's called one of the players a 'bum.' Baseball writers have to write tough. And then when I come down everybody is very cordial and nice, except one of my best friends. My husband called her husband a 'bum.'

"But, I might not object to that. And I might forget about the times a good friend of mine has sat with me in a box, getting red around the ears, because my husband called her husband a 'bum,' and the fans took up the cry at the ball park the next day.

"I'll tell you frankly, I could forget a lot of things. But when I prepare a lot of nice things for the family meal, and he calls me to say that the game is tied up in the eighth, and I turn down the gas . . . it sort of hurts. I mean, food should be eaten when it's cooked.

"And then he calls me in the ninth to tell me the game is still tied, and he can't get home to supper. And it's tied in the tenth, and the eleventh. And by that time the roast is spoiled!

"Sure I could forget a lot of the difficulties of being a sports writer's wife. But I don't think food should be wasted like that."

"By the way, Ma'am, what do you like to do with your spare time?"

Help for Jews In Palestine Is Aim of Parley

Drs. Wise and Prinz, Ickes and Lewisohn Will Be Speakers.

The position of Palestine in relation to world Jewish problems will be discussed at the National Conference for Palestine, opening its two-day meeting at the Mayflower Hotel with a session at 8:30 p. m. today.

Marking the completion of two decades of Jewish activity in Palestine since issuance of the Balfour declaration, the conference will try to mobilize American Jewry behind the United Palestine Appeal for $4,500,000 to aid settlement in the Holy Land of Jews from Poland, Rumania and Germany.

Dr. Wise to Speak.

Speakers tonight will be Dr. Stephen Wise, Dr. Joachim Prinz, exiled German rabbi; Ludwig Lewisohn, noted novelist and critic, and Ittamar Ben Avi, Palestinian editor.

Problems facing Palestine's future will be discussed by Dr. Israel Goldstein, Louis Lipsky and Judge Morris Rothenburg, national chairman of the United Palestine Appeal, at the meeting tomorrow morning.

Closes Sunday Night.

Secretary Ickes will speak in the afternoon session.

Speaking on the same program, Dr. Bernard Joseph, legal adviser of the Jewish Agency for Palestine, will review the present political situation in the Holy Land.

The conference will close Sunday evening with a banquet to be addressed by Senator Robert F. Wagner (Democrat), of New York; Nathan Straus, housing administrator; Dr. Solomon Goldman, of Chicago, and Rabbi Philip Bernstein, of Rochester, N. Y.

Meat and Coffee Industries Assail Rail Rate Increase

By the Associated Press.

The Interstate Commerce Commission heard Chicago meat packers and representatives of livestock producers assert yesterday the proposed 15 per cent increase in railroad freight rates would reduce purchasing power of livestock farmers and delay business recovery.

The Associated Green Coffee Industries of America and the Southwestern Canners Association of Texas also protested against the increase.

The American Farm Bureau Federation went on record as opposed because it would tend to lower farm prices and decrease national purchasing power.

The railroads' proposal found a champion in Walter A. Frey, of Baltimore, member of the communication department committee of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States.

Juvenile Cast Registers Hit In Race Story

'Thoroughbreds Don't Cry' Brings New Youngster to Screen Lead.

"THOROUGHBREDS DON'T CRY." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of a story by Eleanore Griffin and J. Walter Ruben, adapted to the screen by Lawrence Hazzard, featuring Judy Garland, Mickey Rooney, Ronald Sinclair, Sophie Tucker, C. Aubrey Smith, Forrester Harvey, Charles H. Brown, Frankie Darro and Henry Kolker. Directed by Alfred E. Green. Reviewed Friday afternoon by Mary Harris. At Loew's Capitol Theater.

Of all the names over the Capitol Theater this week, Mickey Rooney's should be in the biggest and brightest letters. Mickey is cashing an "if and reverse," not to mention a long shot parlay, by reversing the usual juvenile actor's career and getting better as he gets bigger.

As a cocky, swell-headed and hard-boiled jockey, Mickey checks in with a performance that would add to the credits of any actor, young or old. His kid swagger and self-conscious toughness evoked snorts of masculine mirth all over the theater. A few more like this and young Master Rooney should rate electric lights of his own.

As all readers of movie columns ought to know, "Thoroughbreds Don't Cry" is the picture that had to be made without benefit of Freddie Bartholomew, his role being played by a promising and attractive youngster, Ronald Sinclair, who, as far as this critic is concerned, played so well that Master Bartholomew was never missed. His part was not exactly a plum, either, in that it called for him to be vurra, vurra British in the Eton manner.

Odd Tale for Kids.

This picture is the first in which juvenile actors have been featured so strongly in a race track yarn. Nor does it give the sport of kings any special breaks in the way of covering up its soiled angles. A race is "thrown," with the gamblers cashing in handsomely. There is dirty work at the turns with the jockeys using the "squeeze." Just to add to the general race-track atmosphere that fine old lady, Sophie Tucker, plants her purse in the villain's pocket and calls a policeman. This last, though, is supposed to come under the head of proper punishment. But all winds up merrily with Mickey, Master Sinclair and Judy Garland singing as they drive the truck containing their prize horse on a route that seems to include Pimlico, Churchill Downs and all the big tracks.

The appearance of that lovable old gal, Sophie Tucker, is among the major events. Unfortunately, Sophie's role fits her a bit too tightly. As the keeper of a boarding house for jockeys, Sophie doesn't get a chance to do the sort of thing she does superlatively. What Sophie needs is a place in a big musical where she can do some shouting—and a little convenient astigmatism on the part of the Hays office. Another chile who doesn't get quite the break she deserves is Judy Garland. Here is a fresh and highly talented little girl who can sing and dance like the very dickens. The background of a race track story is hardly the best for her advancement. C. Aubrey Smith and Forrester Harvey, of the veterans, and young Frankie Darro all help the picture along nobly.

That Band Goes Crazy.

Milt Britton and his Merry Musical Maniacs proceed from mild mania to complete frenzy. These lads are a welcome and surprising diversion from the run of orchestral acts. You can't imagine what they are going to do next, and this in itself is very pleasing, even though some of the things they do are in less than dubious taste. Smartest of their numbers was the one where they manhadlle practically all of the old masters, each musician being rigged out as an old master.

Senator Ford turns out to be a new and highly pleasing news commentator. This astute gentleman is both literate and amusing in his angles on the current picture. Dolly Kay in a posy-covered frock and with the biggest red chiffon hankie you've ever seen, warbles effectively.

Stafford and Lewis with Lillian Dawson and Jack Shaindlin offer a pretty dancing and singing act and, incidentally, have a handsome set in black and white with Victorian cord and tassel decor.

Columbia

Vigorous and unrelenting in its admonition that criminality is a futile and fatal avenue to power, "The Last Gangster," yesterday resumed its F street run as chief feature of the bill at Loew's Columbia Theater, with Edward G. Robinson in the title role.

This sterling actor has been looked upon ever since his "Little Caesar" as the ideal actor for this type of role. He plays "The Last Gangster" with rather more effectiveness than he has imparted to any of its predecessors of similar nature. He is admirably supported by a new and richly gifted leading woman, in the person of Rose Stradner; by Lionel Stander, one of the better of the cinema's thugs; James Stewart, in a role of fine sincerity and sympathy, and many others who lend conviction to a grim and melodramatic play.

Much of the action takes place on Alcatraz Island, "the rock," and makes clear with what rigid discipline prisoners on that isolated island fortress are snapped out of their delusions that they are society's "king pins." There is a great and supposedly authentic realism in all this footage of the picture.

It would be difficult to overstress the value of Miss Stradner's work in this subject. She plays her part with strong accents on retributive justice as well as romance. Mr. Stander, of course, is a foregone conclusion in any "hard-boiled" assignment.

The bill is completed by the usual short-reel addenda and a new issue of the "News of the Day"—all well worth seeing as evidence that the screen has not been "sold down the river" to the hoodlums.

Having more or less pioneered in the field of musicalized fol-de-rol on the screen, the Warner Brothers, under the label of First National Pictures, now have gone themselves one better.

BELL.

Linking the silver sheet with radio in no half-hearted manner, the producers, in this item, have fabricated one of the West Coast's most opulent examples of flip and flippant diversion. There is not a slow moment in "Hollywood Hotel." Neither is there an untuneful moment during the course of its spectacular exposition of what an "orchid room" probably never was like, even with a coterie of the most fabulous of radio and night club stars "doing their stuff." This "orchid room," from which the "Hollywood Hotel" broadcasts are supposed to emanate, is a bewildering maze of supernate elegance that never could find its way into being off a studio sound stage. That, however, in no way impairs the high-geared effectiveness of an imaginate, swift and melodious contribution to the silver sheet's major fantasies.

The story is hardly out of the well worn groove of studio-broadcast station romance, but it is alive with comedy, bristling with musical effects that are as bizarre as some of them are magnificent, and peopled with a roster of principals that insures an immediate appeal to any informed audience.

Powell in Fine Voice.

I think I never have heard Dick Powell in better voice than in this picture. Jerry Cooper, Frances Langford and the Lane Sisters are others who contribute to the vocal brilliance of the thing, and a word should be said in behalf of Charles Rosher, the cameraman, who must have had a dizzy time of it on his camera crane chasing all of those marvelous "shots" around a scene of such magnified splendor as to make the "Arabian Nights" conception of grandeur pale into the insignificance of a dim tenth carbon.

Never since music came to the screen, I think, have such minutely revelatory scenes of instrumentalists in action been recorded as characterize the intervals devoted to Benny Goodman and his orchestra and Raymond Paige and his symphonic group. The arrangement of "Dark Eyes," played by the Paige ensemble, is one of the most extravagantly lovely periods of instrumental and vocal beauty ever brought to the screen. It is an overpowering exposition of the screen's potentialities in this field and represents a masterpiece not only of photography but of recording.

The comedy that comprises so rich a vein of interest in this subject is in competent hands—the nimble fingers of the late Ted Healy, Hugh Herbert, Allan Mowbray and Edgar Kennedy. Mr. Herbert "whoo-woos" his way through one of his most devastating excursions into lunacy and Mr. Mowbray's "thumbing" a ride is a gem of inflated ego, revealed by a picture star who has had a voice "dubbed in" for him on the screen and then wonders how he is going to sing over the air, having no voice whatever. Edgar Kennedy "slow burns" himself into flame at frequent intervals. Ted Healy leaves a fine memorial to his comic prowess in one of his best screen roles.

A celebrated newspaper columnist proves herself probably one of the world's worst actresses in playing her own personally charming self and so many others take part in the goings-on that a detailed recapitulation of individual contributions to a garish masquerade would take all day and most of the night.

A De Luxe Stage Bill.

The stage bill at the Earle this week keeps pace with the screen. A new note is struck in the presentation of the vaudeville artists by welding the various acts into a smooth-running revue, sans mistress of ceremonies, but tightly coordinated by a happy concert of skillful direction, elaborate settings, adaptable people and a closely-knit cohesiveness that comes as a distinct novelty in vaudeville presentation.

Benny Baker, that amiable young fellow from the California studios, is one of the prime factors in holding this unusual stage show together. He ambles about through the audience—a recrudescence of the impulses of the stooge of the old Lou Holtz days, no doubt—and chatters enjoyably about nothing much in particular, eating candy and otherwise having himself a time. As foils he utilizes the fine voice of Jeffery Gill and the agile "hoofing" of Lew Spencer. Besides that, he introduces Wynn Murray, the buxom singing star of "Babes in Arms," who registered soundly yesterday afternoon in a group of familiar songs with which her name is indelibly associated.

The Five Toppers, a quintet of remarkable girl gymnasts, open the bill and "Red" Donahue and that fabulous mule, Pal, kick each other around in fine fashion. Andrea Marcelle and two male associates offer their "leopard girl" adagio turn in a tropical setting, and Rosamonde, with a pleasant voice and her piano accordion lend luster to Joe Lombardi's orchestral overture.

The Paramount News and too many screen trailers complete a ne plus ultra program that no discriminating show-shopper will want to miss.

Adds Goofy Fun to Filmusical

the daft comedian of the cinema, who contributes a wealth of his inimitable humor to the spirited action of "Hollywood Hotel," this week's major screen attraction at the Warner Brothers' Earle Theater. He is only one of a long list of celluloid celebrities who are prominently cast.

In Hollywood

With JIMMY FIDLER

Hollywood, Jan. 21.—Idol Chatter: A red-hot argument is the spice of life to Bette Davis. That dollar-sized gold charm that Dolores del Rio wears on her wrist bears the image of the Mother of Guadalupe—it was given to her when she was studying in a Mexico City convent. No love lost: Anita Louise and Olivia de Havilland. All a substitute high-school halfback needs to become an all-American is a movie contract—and a press agent. Stellar nicknames: George Burns is "Ned" to his best friends.

BETTE DAVIS.

Clark Gable has acquired poise—but he never looks completely at ease in "soup-and-fish." As long as Don and Honore Ameche live in Hollywood, we will probably have one successful marriage to salve our civic pride. Never see Lionel Stander without thinking of Union Square, a soap box and a red flag. Things that amuse me: Miriam Hopkins' wide-eyed plaint that she cannot understand why people insist on calling her temperamental. If Errol Flynn is on the up and up about deserting "artificial" Hollywood for life in the raw on a South Sea island, wonder what is holding him—he has already amassed a fortune.

It is sad but true that many of our biggest stars do not have a credit rating in keeping with their incomes. Anne Shirley always reminds me of mignonettes and starched muslin. Hollywood hobbyhorsemen: Fernand Cravet—who spends his spare hours dressing tin soldiers in the various military uniforms of the nations. It takes just one two-minute speech from Director Van Dyke to deflate the average actor's ego.

Norma Shearer remodeled her beach home recently and Irving Thalberg, jr., now occupies the suite of rooms that belonged to his father. To the suite has been added a large playroom with closets and cupboards to house his many toys. But there is one toy in the collection with which he is not allowed to play. It rests in a niche in the wall—a full-rigged model of the H. M. S. Bounty. His father had it made for him during the production of "Mutiny on the Bounty." When it was delivered, some of the spars were out of line and some of the thread-like ropes were broken. Irving G. Thalberg repaired it himself and sat up most of the night to accomplish the task. It was his last gift to Irving, jr.

Thanks to Ann Sothern, the old-fashioned rocking chair is becoming a fad in Filmville. Ann is the most tireless knitter since Madame De Farge—and she insists on rocking while she plys her needles. Following her example, most of the other actresses in the RKO lot are making Afgans, sweaters and such, and a set in that studio resembles nothing so much as an old-time sewing circle in Littletown. Helen Broderick found her rocker in a cluttered second-hand store and it is the envy of all the others—an upholstered creation that predates the Civil War. Ann took one look at it, dashed home and spent the night in toil. Next morning she draped on the back of Miss Broderick's rocker a hand-embroidered sign — "Our Helen."

Stopped in the Paramount publicity department today—and heard Mae West reading the riot act to the publicity lads. "Diamond Lil" was sizzling. After she had undulated back to her dressing room, I asked the cause of the explosion . . . and I have been chuckling ever since. Mae, the screen's greatest exponent of the ungrammatical drawl, burns to a crisp whenever a publicist quotes her as using the word "ain't."

RKO-Keith's

"WISE GIRL." RKO-Radio picturization of a story by Allen Scott, adapted to the screen by Allen Scott and Charles Norman, starring Miriam Hopkins and Ray Millard, supported by Walter Abel, Henry Stephenson, Guinn Williams, Marianna Strellby and Betty Philson. Directed by Leigh Jason. Reviewed Friday evening by Dorothea Lewis.

The BIG NEWS is: That much disputed "March of Time," concerning Nazi Germany, is here on Fifteenth street after all. Although the rumored ban on its showing in Washington was honestly meant, "Inside Germany in 1938" is certainly a film that should be seen.

If it is accurate as earlier "March of Time" reels have been, it tells a sad and frightening and almost—to most of us in this country—inconceivable story. Moreover, it is told in vivid and striking photography and interpreted in a clear and straightforward manner. Here is an unusual opportunity to see history in the making, and a history that all too evidently affects much of the world outside the borders within which it began.

The feature picture this week, "Wise Girl" just doesn't seem quite to come off. Which is rather bad, because it has both possibilities and a first rate cast that it might have lived up to. Apparently, the basic idea started out straightforwardly and satisfactorily with considerable heart in it and then bumped smack into the present Hollywood trend toward goofiness and mad-eyed comedy. This is as goofy as any and sillier than most, even when it shouldn't be. That makes it a sort of half-breed or stepchild, or something, without being too certain just what it is.

That basic plot concerns itself with a nice young artist, who doesn't eat or earn very well, but is doing a swell job of bringing up his dead brother's two young daughters. But the rich family of the children's mother—also dead—seeks their custody, all in the interest of giving them the traditional "advantages" which they don't want. The rich family sends its own child, a spoiled but personable young brat, to undermine the artist's claims, etc., etc. You guess the rest.

Miriam Hopkins is the brat and Ray Milland is the artist. Both are attractive, pleasant people and Milland gives a particularly facile and engaging performance. Miriam plays such a brat so brattishly that she will probably infuriate you.

Two young ladies, Marianna Strellby and Betty Philson, who are not yet complete actresses but who are completely disarming and charming, play the popular little orphans, and Walter Abel, Guinn Williams and Henry Stephenson help out. Silliness that is funny includes the prize fight scene and Miriam's public bath. Silliness that is merely annoying includes the court scene, played in cheap, short-reel style, the jail sequence and that telephonic climax (?).

Our favorite actor and current crush, Mr. Donald Duck, appears in a human and heart-warming little item, entitled, surprisingly for Mr. Duck, "Self-Control." Our only adverse comment is that with Mr. Duck and Mr. Milland on one program, the problem of knowing what the actors are talking about is doubly difficult. We wouldn't change Donald's diction if we could, but we think Ray Milland ought to take voice exercises.

Good Deed.

Pretty Delores Casey, who lost a Paramount contract when stricken with tuberculosis two years ago, found a part waiting for her in "Doctor Rhythm" when she was released from the hospital as cured. Bing Crosby, with whom she had worked in "Mississippi," had arranged it for her. And the part landed her another term contract.

"MANNEQUIN." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of the novel by Katharine Brush, adapted to the screen by Lawrence Hazzard, costarring Joan Crawford and Spencer Tracy, with Alan Curtis, Ralph Morgan, Oscar O'Shea, Elisabeth Risdon and Leo Gorcey. Directed by Frank Borzage. Previewed on Tuesday, January 18. At Loew's Palace Theater.

That is to say that after having adventured into the field of pseudo-philosophical drama in such tricky things as "The Bride Wore Red," for example, she now appears in a vehicle that strikes much closer home to the interests of the mass of theatergoers. It is, as goes without saying—the genesis of the fable being what it is—a tale of struggle on Hester street in New York—the struggle of an ambitious girl who begins as a factory worker, graduates to the chorus, becomes a mannequin in a smart Park avenue atelier (if that is what it is) and eventually marries the steamship tycoon who also originated on Hester street.

These progressive gradations of plot structure afford Miss Crawford opportunity to revert to many of those early qualities that first brought her to a place of dominance on the screen. I should rate this as the best picture she has had in many months. However, "Mannequin" is not solely notable for the fine outlets for her talents that it accords Miss Crawford. It is no less distinguished by the exceptional play it gives the extraordinary talents for naturalistic acting possessed by that stellar exponent of deliberate and repressed methods, Spencer Tracy.

Tracy Goes Social.

Mr. Tracy finds himself all dressed up in his present assignment. Although cast as a "steamboat man" in this one, John L. Hennessy already has reached pretty well toward the top of the financial heap by the time the action gets under way and is on his way to a million, if he has not already got it on the black side of the ledger. He knows what dinner jackets and swanky apartments overlooking the river are all about. But Jessie Cassidy, in the meantime, marries an overstuffed young good-for-nothing who thinks he is a fight manager and knows he is the "master mind" delegated to solve all of life's perplexing mysteries by methods that are just a trifle shady. He is a combination of parasite, blackmailer and yellow rat. The developments of the drama revolve around these three.

Miss Crawford does an uncommonly able piece of dissembling in the assumption of the role of the girl who scrambles up the social scale through many contrasted strata of metropolitan penury, combat and eventual affluence. It is the sort of thing she does best. But, even so, the acting honors go unequivocally to Spencer Tracy, who here combines humor, solid sense and the dominance of accomplishment in splendid balance. Alan Curtis, the Eddie Miller, whose natural habitat is the gutter, makes a vivid impression in as unsympathetic a role as any youngster was ever given to cut his acting teeth on. Curtis is an heroic figure, physically, and a young man who promises to go far, since he can do as well as he does with a role that is an audience handicap from the moment he makes his first speech.

A Handsome Production.

"Mannequin" is produced in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's best manner and quite obviously was looked upon as a subject deserving of the best the studio had to offer. It justifies that confidence.

Ralph Morgan is importantly cast in this release, as are Oscar O'Shea and Elisabeth Risdon, as Jessie's tenement parents. Miss Risdon offers an especially effective portrayal of a weary mother whose dreams never came true. Leo Gorcey, as an incorrigible younger brother, recalls the effectiveness of his work on both stage and screen as one of the tough kids in "Dead End." Frank Borzage's direction, as always, is flawless.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's second release in the "What Do You Think?" series of provocative short-reel "miniatures:" "How to Do the Shag," an Arthur Murray musico-dancing subject, and the "News of the Day" are the auxiliaries on the Palace screen of a major feature that will do much to rehabilitate John Crawford as a top-ranking star, add to the luster of the name of Tracy and give Alan Curtis a flying start toward individual eminence.

New York, Jan. 21.

ETIQUETTE DEPT.: At the recent White House dinner to Vice President and Mrs. Garner, attended by 87 white-tied and tailed Senators and their begowned ladies, Percy Grainger and Elisabeth Schumann entertained in the east ballroom . . . The Garners then said their good nights and the President started following Garner down the hall. Suddenly Garner wheeled and came bouncing back down the red-carpeted hall in front of Roosevelt and Col. Watson, his aide . . . "I for-got something," said the Vice President and guest of honor . . . He reached into the potted palm which separates the main hall entrance from the long corridor—and withdrew the partly used cigar he had started to smoke after dinner.

• • • •

FINANCE DEPT.: Dorothy Parker, now at Metro, received a telegram from the Modern Forum, reading: "Sinclair Lewis will lecture at Shrine Auditorium Thursday evening, January 20, on propaganda and poppycock. Would you introduce him to the audience? We would appreciate it, and would also appreciate your wiring reply at once" . . . The wire arrived Collect . . . Miss Parker's replying wire read: "Emphatically refuse to introduce, attend, or in any way regard the outdated monologue you propose as entertaining on Thursday. Condole with you on the inability of Mr. Lewis' management to pay 32 cents for the telegram you sent me. Suggest you get Tom Girdler as master of ceremonies."

• • • •

DRAMA DEPT.: Chamberlain Brown, who will produce "Taken From Life," by Arthur Chalmers—the cop now awaiting trial for murder—was a guest of Warden Lawes last week, at Sing Sing. Lawes had heard of this play, and that it contained a deathhouse scene. He therefore invited Brown to attend the execution of Salvatore Ossido, convicted of a sex murder . . . The Broadway producer was in the execution room when Ossido went to the chair. And in his hands, during the proceedings, was Chalmer's script, from which Brown made comparisons.

ILLUSTRATED SECTION: For the past few weeks Mayor Hague of Jersey City has been co-operating with Margaret Bourke-White, the Life photographer, who is photographing the Jersey City scene. The Mayor's aides have rendered assistance in the photographing of the city's official buildings, its banks, etc. . . . But Miss Bourke-White also has been photographing the slums, the political clubs, the labor situation, etc. For Hague still isn't aware—that Margaret Bourke-White not only is one of America's famous photographers but also one of its noted liberals.

EMPLOYMENT DEPT.: Merritt Hulburd quit his $72,000-a-year job with Goldwyn to return to his first love—a $15,000 editorial job at the Saturday Evening Post . . . Before leaving he met Goldwyn's assistant, Fred Kohlmar, and said: "The life out here isn't for people like us. Why don't you do what I'm doing—going back to the old job" . . . "I can't," Kohlmar sighed. "I was a cotton-converter with Cohn, Hall & Marx. They got a machine now doing my work!"

• • • •

MUSIC DEPT.: Paul Whiteman, who presented Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue" at Carnegie Hall, tried to send a singing wire to Benny Goodman last Sunday, at Goodman's Carnegie Hall swing concert . . . Whiteman asked Postal Telegraph to have an operator sing "Rhapsody in Blue" to Goodman. But both Postal and Western Union informed that its operators sing only "Happy Birthday" messages. Whiteman compromised with a direct wire: "Congratulations. Remember, a clarinet sounds just as good through a lorgnette. When you're finished swinging, they'll need a new Carnegie Foundation."

• • • •

LOCAL NEWS: One of the reasons why John L. Lewis and Tom Lamont visited the White House with A. A. Berle, jr., was to get them to support Berle for Governor . . . Jack White's 18 Club will represent Fifty-second street in "Dynamic New York," the movie short which the Rockefellers will release nationally . . . Abe Lyman and Billy Rose settled their differences and Lyman returned to the Casa Manana . . . Gertrude Niesen opens at the Versailles next Thursday . . . A Fifty-second street cafe had its license revoked, but has been given 90 days' time within which to wind up its affairs.

• • • •

REALTY DEPT.: Nathan Strauss, the Federal Housing Administrator, attended the premiere of "One-third of a Nation," the WPA show about housing. The member of the cast who portrays Strauss looks exactly like him, and Strauss commented upon that resemblance . . . "Yes," the actor agreed, "I do a lot of things the way you do" . . . "Think so?" Strauss replied. "Then come down to Washington and take a load off me."

• • • •

INVESTMENT DEPT.: Hiram Bloomingdale, the department store official, and his son were among those propositioned by the Group Theater to back Clifford Odets' "Golden Boy," and spurned the offer . . . The other night young Bloomingdale met Odets and apologized. "I'm sorry about that. Forgive me," he stated . . . "Please don't apologize," Odets informed. "Luise and I put up the money—$5,000 each. It means $70,000 to us now."

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Parents Who Lack Intelligence and Common Sense Should Not Expect Such Traits in Offspring, Girl Says.

Are modern parents lying down on their job, are they shirking their moral responsibility to keep their sons' and daughters' feet on the paths of righteousness, in turning them loose, unchaperoned, at the age of 18, to try their own wings socially? A modern mother put the question to this column on January 10, asking: "How much freedom should an 18-year-old girl have in this age of night clubs, cocktail parties and automobiles?" This columnist, having given her own opinion on the subject, referred the question to youth itself for further discussion. The resultant response would seem to indicate that the modern generation is, in the main, intelligent, trustworthy, right-minded and morally conservative, as this columnist presupposed. Representative comment is offered here today, and a page of such letters will be published in The Sunday Post. M. H.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I wish to second the opinions of the girl of 20, whose letter voting in favor of "liberal, intelligent, far-sighted parents," was published in your column of January 19. My parents brought me up in exactly the same manner as hers. They treated me and my sister as though we had normal intelligence. From the time we were 12 and 14, respectively, we were allowed to have door keys of our own, and when we went out with other children we had only to waken mother when we came home to tell her how the party was, or just to let her know we were in, if we hadn't been any place in particular.

I shall not tell my whole story, because it is almost a word-for-word duplication of hers . . . but it occurs to me, after comparing her case with mine, that, while parents should treat their children as though they were intelligent human beings, still the factor of inheritance plays a very important part in a young person's general conduct. Parents cannot expect to have sensible, intelligent children if they themselves are somewhat lacking in those lines.

• • • •

In this girl's case and my own, our parents illustrated common sense and we inherited the trait. When placed on our own initiative, we did only what was right and proper and never even wanted to be—or thought of being—drunken, immoral or promiscuous. My love affair, like her marriage, is going along smoothly and happily. I have been engaged to be married for two years, and expect to be for about four more years, because I have to wait for my husband-to-be to finish his college course, take a year's post-graduate work, and then get enough experience to earn what he considers an adequate family income.

• • • •

I am willing to wait because I, too, work; I keep myself busy; I see him twice every day and we have a very deep mutual love which keeps us from criticism and misunderstanding of each other. I am learning the little faults he has, which I know I can't change, and which I disregard because, strange to say, I don't think I would love him half so much if he didn't have them. In my opinion, long engagements have their value. In conclusion, I wish to say, Miss Haworth, that all my friends read your column and we consider it splendid. We are all college students ,in the junior and senior years. Sincerely. J. W. H.

The Dangerous Attitude.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a girl 20 years old, and have "been around" since I was 14. My experiences have been varied and broad. My opinion is that parents should rear their children with kindly, understanding, sympathetic discipline that is always expressive of love. When a girl begins to go out, her mother should tell her, quite frankly, of the pitfalls and regrets of certain diversions. She should never forbid her to do anything. No, she should advise her not to do certain things, telling the reasons why.

• • • •

The most dangerous attitude of all to plant in a child's mind is that of: "I'll show them how much they know! They're just mean and old-fashioned!" If a child gets home late, under questionable circumstances, the parent should never jump on the child and condemn her with harsh, irritable words. The parent should retain his self-control, and in a friendly, kindly way ask if she has enjoyed herself, where she has been, etc., and then mention that in future she should come in earlier, as it is injurious to her health to be out late, when it is not necessary . . .

• • • •

The thing to remember, parents, is to love your children. Show them your love, not in lavish expenditure on expensive education, cars, clothes, parties, etc., so much as in wise and tender counsel. Don't be afraid to step down from the pedestal of motherhood or fatherhood and admit that you, perhaps, erred in your youth; that all of us err; and that it is because you do love your children that you wish to help them avoid all the heartbreak possible. Put the question up to them: What do you want out of life? Do you want to be clean, honest, joyous and respected? Or do you want to be damaged goods, smirched by scandal and saddened by remorse? In closing, I wish to say, may God in His infinite wisdom bless and forgive the young their mistakes, and instill in the heart of every parent a bigger and more unselfish understanding. HAPPY TWENTY.

Youth Called 'Irresponsible.'

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am not a reader of your column and have not been for a year or so; to be exact, not since I found out that, take it all in all, it is very degrading to youth. But on January 10 someone asked me to read your advice to "M. D." I did, and remarked how terrible to instill such nonsense into the receptive mind of youth. I expected you would receive some sensible replies taking issue with your statements, and I notice you had one on January 14. And then I discovered you were putting the question—"How much freedom should the modern adolescent be given?" up to boys and girls from 17 to 23 to answer. How silly!

• • • •

While I am not a parent, nevertheless my heart goes out to those who have the responsibility for rearing decent children in this day and age, and who are trying to discharge that responsibility in the most honorable way. I am going to watch your column for a day or two, to see the replies you receive from irresponsible children. I expect them to heartily agree that there is no harm in drinking, smoking, being out all night and petting, as best suits them. I wish you would try to persuade them to obey their parents who, after all, know best.

Culottes Popular.

Culottes are staging a return to fashion, especially for the junior miss. Those on display now for resort and spring feature Roman striped percale (an old-fashioned fabric in new guise), made in suspender styling with bright contrasting blouses which are collared in the stripes. Godet fullness has also been added; stripes across the front of the garment are in reversed arrangement.

Gold and Silver Accents for Black Frocks

By Ethel Ehlen.

The Post Fashion Editor.

THERE IS NO BETTER remedy for your mid-winter black dress that is beginning to look very somber and jaded than several pieces of massive costume jewelry. In the fashion spotlight at present, gold is in the lead with sterling silver next in importance; synthetic jewels combined with metal also are much to the fore in lovely copies of rare old pieces made of real jewels.

The choice of costume jewelry depends upon the styling of your dress, particularly the neckline. For deep V's, square or rounded neck treatments, one of the smart metal necklaces adorned with a locket-like decoration of gold or silver, is an ideal accompaniment. There are not only good looking copies of museum pieces in the Washington stores and shops, but many genuine antiques, if your budget will allow of the expenditure. Colored beads are also in this classification with such colors as medium blue, warm tones of light brown, gold and pale pink to lend a bit of drama to an all-black costume.

For high necklines or deep V's, a huge clip or pin is the smart choice, in gold, silver or jeweled versions. These are likewise chic complements for tailored suit blouses; a glittering clip in lieu of a boutonniere is another mid-season vagary to add swank to the suit. A bit newer than the metal link costume jewelry is the link variety studded with small simulated jewels of many color tones. To glorify contemporary fashions is the old-fashioned brooch in metal filigree and brilliant jewels—copies of antiques.

Wide bracelets either matching or harmonizing with necklaces, clips or pins, are much in evidence. Because of the short sleeve craze this winter, bracelets have returned to vogue with a vengeance and the wider they are and the more massive they appear, the smarter they are considered. If you are daring, you can wear as many as six bracelets and get away with it.

Today's HEALTH TALK

Twins Remain Alike.

The subject of twins is so interesting that one or two stories from Dr. H. H. Newman's recent book are worth repeating. At the end of the article yesterday, I spoke of twins who had been separated during childhood being brought together in mature life.

One of these actual life stories is that of Gladys and Helen. They had been separated in early infancy. Helen knew that she had a twin sister somewhere, but had no clews as to where she might be. One of the strange things about the story is that by devious paths they gravitated to the same city and were both well established when they crossed each other's trails.

Helen was a grade school teacher in a large school. Among her favorite pupils was a little girl who was very fond of her teacher, and one morning this pupil did not smile and appeared to be downcast. On inquiry it appeared that she thought she had seen Helen at a concert in a distant part of the city. She had said "hello" and had smiled at her teacher but had received not so much as a smile of recognition. Helen denied that she had been at the concert, but the pupil insisted that the lady she saw was exactly like Helen, and that she could not have been mistaken.

Helen suspected that the person in question must be her long-lost twin sister. She found a number of people who had been at the concert, and eventually talked to a person who recognized her because she looked so much like Gladys. They were soon brought together, and had a happy reunion after an extreme separation of 28 years. When they met, each had six fillings in her teeth, all in the molars or bicuspids. In spite of their long separation they had similar tastes and similar reactions to life.

Another case was that of Ed and Fred, who lived without knowledge of each other's existence for 25 years. Each had been obsessed from boyhood with the idea that he had a brother. They lived a thousand miles apart, and at the time they met both of them were working as repair men in branches of the same great telephone company; they were married at the same age, and each had a baby son; each owned a fox terrier dog named Trixie.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Seven pamphlets by Dr. Clendening can now be obtained by sending 10 cents in coin, for each, and a self-addressed envelope stamped with a three-cent stamp, to Dr. Logan Clendening, in care of The Washington Post. The pamplets are: "Three Weeks' Reducing Diet," "Indigestion and Constipation," "Reducing and Gaining," "Infant Feeding," "Instructions for the Treatment of Diabetes," "Feminine Hygiene" and "The Care of the Hair and Skin."

Costume Suits Lead Fashions for Spring

Chicago, (AP).—Costume suits are seen as a leading spring fashion by manufacturers. The three-piece suit will be a headliner. The casual body silhouette is first in favor, and coats vary in length from finger-tip to seven-eighths.

Often the coat and snugly fitted jacket are the same color and the skirt a darker shade, or the coat may be darker and the jacket and skirt of a harmonizing pastel. Beige, gray, aqua, pink and navy, with new shades of brown, blue and grayed green, are style color leaders.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes.

New York, Jan. 21.

A VERY moot question indeed—in fact, one of the mootest now facing the local picture as far as our sex is concerned—has been dragged into the spotlight anew by a lawmaker. State Senator Coughlin, our city, has just introduced a bill at Albany forbidding women to drink at bars. This is no trifle. The women of big cities, especially this one, learned to like bar-flying during the days of smart speakeasies. They thought it was "cute," probably, and that it was another successful invasion of a masculine monopoly. Repeal saw the matter become commonplace, and in these evil times there are often as many ladies as gents at stylish bars when 5 p. m. arrives. Men, naturally, hate it; at least the majority do. My own spouse, until he foreswore strong waters entirely, grew purple at the practice, though now he merely glances into cocktail lounges and sneers, as is the mood of many reformed rake-hellies.

ALICE HUGHES

The idea seems to be that the business of perching at bars is far from ladylike and refined—that a woman can enjoy her cocktail in more seemly style while seated at a proper table. The habit is already forbidden in some States. It will be interesting to see how Senator Coughlin's bill makes out.

• • • •

Reporters polled some of the smarter public houses on the East Side uptown, with varying results. Radio's Patricia "Honeychile" Wilder, pride of Macon, Ga., agreed with the solon, remarking that she is an old-fashioned girl. Gladys Parker, the clever and peppery clothes designer, is quoted as saying: "I think he's crazy. Why shouldn't a woman drink at a bar if she cares to?"

• • • •

Well, there it is. But I fancy more New York ladies, found in such places, would vote for rather than against, but if the bill gets out of committee the matter will be up to our State assembly, notably conservative. Perhaps this time next year the girls who want cocktails must snaffle them at tables, quietly!

• • • •

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Today's a very big day indeed for our thousands of Lily Pons girls. Their 100-pound idol finally comes down from the screen and makes her season's debut at the Metropolitan this afternoon in the leading role of Rossini's "Barber of Seville"—the first performance it's had here in six years. One by one the dream maidens leave Hollywood for a few opera chores. Grace Moore has already returned. There are two reasons. First, the Met's the Met, goal of all great larks. And a maintained Met reputation never shrank the size of a movie pay-check, either, if we may get sordid about art, so-called . . .

• • • • • •

A sad time here for sentimentalists who love ships. The great Leviathan sails away to Britain to be cut up into junk, and so passes the mightiest ship ever to sail under the American flag even though the Germans did build her. My little old gentleman was one of the 97,000 American soldiers she carried to France during the war, and he learned to love her, and has been sobbing softly at her passing. Goodbye, old Levi! You were a big help, and a great girl when you had it! . . . But thank goodness she's gone from the Hoboken docks, at that. The Levi was a tragic sight to people sailing up the Hudson to their various piers!

• • • •

I saw Tallulah Bankhead, unlucky star, turning into the Hotel Gotham the other day, showing that she's back at her favorite town home. She says she is reading five or six plays, a day, trying to find a good one with which she can dare Broadway fate once more! Better luck next time, Talloo!

Shrinking Wives Passe for Men In Public Life

By Malvina Lindsay.

YOUNG WOMEN who picture themselves as wives of future Senators and Representatives or of other men in public life would do well to begin right now practicing to say with assurance and aplomb, "Madame Chairman and Friends." For speak some day in public they must and will.

About 20 wives of members of Congress who attended the first session of a public speaking class yesterday at the Congressional Club will testify with certainty to that fact. Having heard repeatedly the paralyzing words, "Now we will hear from the wife of Congressman So and So," they have decided to accept graciously the modern dictum that the wife of a public man must now be able to think and talk "on her feet."

The English custom of expecting the wife of a public man to be also a public speaker is spreading rapidly in this country, according to Mrs. Hugh Butler, who is training the congressional wives in the art of oratory. "The American public is demanding that the wives of public men take a more prominent part in public life," said Mrs. Butler. "For many years in this country the hoary tradition prevailed that because a wife cooked the bacon for her husband she couldn't do anything else. This was a hangover from pioneer days. As a result, wives of political candidates and public officials were careful to adopt the pose of 'homebodies.' Now that has all changed. Whether or not a woman campaigns actively with her husband, she is at least expected to know how to make good will speeches in her community, to be able to make talks at banquets and luncheons, to accept gifts and introductions with ease and otherwise perform graciously in the public eye.

No "Dumb" Wives.

"One of the first things I do is to warn my pupils against that ghastly trite comment, 'One speaker in our family is enough.' In the first place, such a statement isn't true. Certainly when the wife gets aroused about anything in the home there are two speakers in the family. And there is no reason why the wife of any public man should giggle and blush and be tongue-tied when she is introduced at a meeting or asked to make a talk. Certainly such behavior is no help to her husband."

During a residence of eight years in England, Mrs. Butler observed the extent to which English wives aided their husbands in public life. "The wife of a candidate for Parliament always appears with him on the platform," she said. "In fact, English girls are trained from an early age to think and talk in public life. If they marry men in public life they take additional lessons along this line."

One of the lessons in Mrs. Butler's course for the Congressional wives is on the presentation and acceptance of gifts. Among other things, she warns the recipient of a gift not to stutter and stammer and let her eyes fill with tears. "Don't gasp and gurgle and above all don't say that you just can't say anything because you are so overcome," she advises. "And whatever you do, don't look at the gift with greedy eyes. Regard it only as a symbol and in your speech of acceptance do not emphasize the material aspects of the gift."

Describing Washington.

The good will speech is the subject of another lesson in the course. This speech, which the congressional wife is often asked to make in her community, often deals with the Washington scene. Mrs. Butler warns the maker of this speech not to picture Washington as too glamorous a place or she will make her constituents jealous of her privilege of living there. "Show the bad as well as the good," she advises.

Inexperienced speakers particularly are urged not to hide behind tables or to shuffle apologetically to the platform. They are told to stand up boldly and speak out, no matter how insecure they may feel.

"Don't say that you have nothing to say," Mrs. Butler admonishes her pupils. "Everybody has something to say. Everybody is just bursting with ideas. You don't know how much you have to say until you start saying it."

King Farouk Buys His Wife's Trousseau

Paris, Jan. 22.

Young King Farouk of Egypt personally selected a trousseau of Oriental magnificence for his bride, Mlle. Farida Zulifar, whom he married January 20. The dresses and coats cost $25,000.

The wedding gown was of silver lace mounted over satin, made by the house of Worth, traditional couturier of queens. The court train, eight meters long, was of silver lame. The veil, of the same length, of shirred tulle incrusted in the back and around the edges with silver lace, was worn under a diadem. The face veil extended to just below the chin, of the same tulle.

The court dresses glitter with gold and precious metals. One is of shell pink hand-made lace; another, of pale blue lame, is cut on statuesque Greek lines, and a third is in a soft peach rose color spangled with pearls.

The lingerie is a miracle of gossamer lace and shimmering satin. Twenty Armenian girls have worked on it for the last four months, and each of the 300 pieces bears an embroidered crown and the queen's name. Priceless lace, once the property of the Empress Elizabeth of Austria, has been used for some of the sets. There is one exquisite creation in white lace cut on Mary of Scotland lines and worn with a satin negligee embroidered with gold.

Silver Fox Scarves.

Paris (U.P.).—Silver fox in scarves, boleros and capes is seen frequently with black costumes, and most popular among hats are the dark felt "profile" beret and black felt styles with bright-trimmed turban base and flattened crown that rises high and juts forward.

YOUR FIGURE, MADAME!

By Ida Jean Kain.

BEAUTY? It is fabricated from the homespun philosophy of work . . . and for that you have the assurance of a famous analyst whose clientele numbers some of the most enchantingly beautiful women of our day. With determination and work, Rose Laird firmly believes, there are almost no limits to what can be accomplished. The plain woman can make herself attractive, the women of 60 can look 40 and the round, apple face can be changed into lovely contours.

Rose Laird, as you may have heard, is the expert to whom such stars as Grace Moore and Gladys Swarthout turn for advice. She is a forthright person who says that all your trips to the beauty parlor are only temporarily helpful unless you are willing to do a great deal for yourself.

Knuckle Rubs Help.

By a great deal, Miss Laird means just that. If you slump instead of holding yourself beautifully erect, posture correction will be one of the first things on your program. "Slumping is tiring ,and there are no tired beauties," this analyst declares. Also, if you are to retain the "alert, buoyant expression of youth," you must have daily invigorating exercise. Without a lovely carriage and a supple body, no woman can be beautiful—and they are two characteristics of beauty that any woman can have!

But what about a round face? And how can you keep the clearly delineated chin and neckline of youth? Knuckle massage is the answer to both these questions, and here is the way Rose Laird has described it to some of the screen's famous beauties:

Close the hands loosely to form fists and place the second joint of the kneckle at the base of the throat on either side. Move each bent finger separately and "walk" them up to the chin, knead there for a moment and continue along the jawbone to the ear.

Avoid Skin Stretching.

Now, place the loosely clenched fists on the chin where the muscles droop, work the knuckles deeply and proceed along the expression lines up to the corner of the nose. Then kneed across the face, under the cheek bone to the ear and up the temples.

Miss Laird warns against surface massage, which stretches the skin and does more harm than good. She follows the knuckle massage with three one-minute exercises. In the first, you fill the mouth with air, holding the lips slightly open and release the air in energetic little puffs as if you were playing a horn. In the "bee chaser," repeat the first exercise, but rotate the head while puffing, as though you were watching a bee circle the head. For the "prima donna," stand erect and tilt the head back, eyes to the ceiling and mouth open wide. Slowly close the mouth by pulling up the lower jaw. Hold the head in this position for an instant, then tilt the head to normal position by pulling up with the cords at the back of the neck. You should feel the muscles pull taut right down to the waist.

To be beautiful, woman must have a supple body and a lovely carriage.

Reducing Diet Given.

Posture is as important to your neckline as it is to your figure, for you will have double chins and an ugly throat line unless your posture is good.

The Truccos Entertain At Musicale

Fifty Hear Mr. Morelli Sing and Mr. Palacios Play the Piano.

The Misses Marta, Graciela and Rebeca Trucco, daughters of the Chilean Ambassador, entertained at a musicale yesterday afternoon at which two of their countrymen were the stars. They are Carolo Morelli, barytone, and Armando Palacios, pianist, who played at the White House following the dinner for the Supreme Court on Thursday.

It was the first time either had played at the White House, and the artists said yesterday that the experience had been thrilling. Contrary to the custom in England, where performers are usually honored with some gift from the King or Queen after they play, those who offer their services to the Executive Mansion receive nothing except the glory which comes from being able to say "I played for the President."

The musicale was held in a small room off the entrance hall. Both artists repeated the program they gave at the Executive Mansion.

Miss Graciela Trucco, whose marriage to Fernando Benitez will take place February 18, looked dark and handsome yesterday in a black crepe frock with a white collar. A corsage of large orchids completed her costume. Miss Rebeca was in a simple beige frock and the third sister wore a gown of greenish blue shade. Assisting during the afternoon was Miss Olga Patterson, daughter of the late Guillermo Patterson, one-time Cuban Ambassador here. Miss Patterson is a close friend of the Truccos and will be a bridesmaid at the wedding in February.

Pink Gladioli
Decorate Rooms

Large vases of pink gladioli were everywhere at the embassy yesterday. There were some in the hall, in the music room, and again on the dining room table, where they were flanked with green candles in silver holders.

The guests included many members of the diplomatic corps. Glimpsed in the crowd were the Portugese Minister and Mme. de Bianchi, the latter in a coat of black broadtail and a matching Cossack hat; Senora de Pastoriza, wife of the Dominican Minister; Marquis Capomazza, of the Italian Embassy; Laurence Bungardeanu, of the Rumanian legation, and the Greek Minister, Demetrios Sicilianos, who is going to New York again next week for a brief stay.

Mrs. Harold Hinton was present, attending one of her last parties before she goes to the Union Memorial Hospital in Baltimore tomorrow for an appendix operation. Stellita Stapleton, in a heavy mink coat over a wine-colored frock, was glimpsed chatting with Joao de Deus Ramos, of the Portuguese legation. Miss Fina Tudela, whose father heads the Peruvian delegation to the Peru-Ecuador Boundary Conference, was another guest. She wore a black velvet frock with a gold lame sash and a small black skull cap.

Thomas Burkes
Among the Guests

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Burke were also among the guests. Mrs. Burke is a Chilean, and was a member of the "Flying Caravan"—the group of women who toured South America by airplane recently in the interests of peace. Mrs. Burke is also a distinguished pianist. She is a member of the well known del Pulgar family, and has two sisters who are also talented, one as a painter and the other as a musician. Yesterday Mrs. Burke wore a black gown, simply made, and a smart black hat with a long veil.

Manuel Trucco, brother of the hostess, was seeing yesterday that all the guests had a pleasant time. He is such an ardent devotee of the Big Apple that someone suggested he should be called Manuel "Trucko."

The dining room table was loaded with delicious food, such as thin sandwiches of lettuce, and cheese and delicious cakes. In one corner of the room was a bar, where the usual whisky and cocktails were served.

Others present were Miss Florence Harris, in a black wool frock and matching hat; Mrs. Isabella Gest, likewise in black, and many others—in all, about fifty.

The Gaineses Plan To Live in Capital

Capt. and Mrs. Harry W. Gaines, who were married Thursday in the Washington Cathedral, will return in a few days from a wedding trip south to make their home at Massachusetts avenue and Eighteenth street.

Mrs. Gaines is the former Miss Marian Bullard, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Byrl Bullard, of Hopkinsville, Ky. Capt. Gaines, who is the son of Mrs. Henry Pendleton Gaines, of Cape Giradeau, Mo., is an officer in the Organized Reserves.

The ceremony on Thursday was performed in the Bethlehem Chapel of the Cathedral by the Rev. Noble C. Powell. A reception followed at the home of the bridegroom's cousins, Mr. and Mrs. Frank F. Zundel, of Takoma Park.

Mrs. Gaines wore a green street length dress and black accessories. Her flowers were a corsage of violets and roses. Her attendant, Miss Lucy Ann Zundel, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank F. Zundel, wore a dress of shell pink and carried an old-fashioned bouquet.

Mountbattens Fail To Visit Capital on Their Trip to U. S.

Lord and Lady Louis Mountbatten, who landed in New York Thursday, are, unfortunately for those who like titles, not expected to come to Washington, according to the British Embassy here.

Lord Mountbatten, who is a cousin of King George VI, is en route to Jamaica via Palm Beach with Lady Mountbatten. After five weeks on the West Indian Island, the Mountbattens are expected to spend several weeks in the United States.

Lady Mountbatten is a daughter of the wealthy Lord Mount Temple and was a godchild of the late King Edward VII. She is as beautiful as her husband is handsome. She visited this country several winters ago, but Lord Mountbatten has not been here since he arrived in 1924 in the entourage of the then Prince of Wales.

Both are gay and fond of night-club life.

Big Apple Clash On Ball Program

It'll be Washington vs. Baltimore on Friday, January 28 . . . and the bone of contention will be the Big Apple. All of which means that when the Esquire ball gets under way at the Alcazar in the Monumental City next week, a Washington team of Big Appleers, headed by Lowell Bradford, Thomas Clagett and Hal Crowell, will invade territory north of the District Line.

The affair, one of Baltimore's swankiest, has Miss Betty Galt and James Wimsatt on its committee, and the distinguished sponsors include Mrs. John E. L. Conley, Mrs. George O'D. Boone, Mrs. R. Bangleton Booker, Mrs. John W. Boynton, Mrs. Leslie Leard, jr.; Mrs. B. Riall Jackson, Mrs. John Ridgely, 3d; Mrs. John B. Scott, Mrs. James F. Turner, jr., and Mrs. W. E. C. Swope.

Birthday Ball of President Likely to Be "Most Gala" Party

Sponsored by leaders in official, diplomatic and social circles, the President's birthday celebration ball, to be held next Saturday night in seven of Washington's leading hotels, promises to surpass in attendance and entertainment any similar event ever held in the Capital. Mrs. Roosevelt heads the list of patrons and patronesses and virtually the entire Diplomatic Corps, headed by the British Ambassador and Lady Lindsay, have agreed to serve. The Vice President and Mrs. Garner and the entire Cabinet have also enrolled as patrons for the event, while Army and Navy leaders, including Gen. Pershing, are on the list.

Names recently added include those of Postmaster General James A. Farley, Mrs. Charles B. Henderson, Mrs. Sherman Miles, the Minister of Lithuania and Mrs. Zadeikis, the Minister of the Dominican Republic and Senora de Pastoriza, the Ambassador of Ecuador, Capitan Colon Eloy Alfaro; the Acting Consul General of Esthonia, Charles Kuusik; the Minister of Venezuela, Dr. Diogenes Escalante; Judge D. Lawrence Groner, Mr. and Mrs. Harold M. Stevens and Mrs. John F. Wilkins.

Mrs. Roosevelt
To Make the Rounds

Mrs. Roosevelt, as usual, will make the rounds of the seven hotels, appearing in a special box at each of the dances. She will be escorted by a special committee of Washingtonians and a police guard of honor.

The "Gold Plate" breakfast will be held at the Carlton Hotel as usual, with the Comptroller of the Currency, J. F. T. O'Connor, acting as chairman for the event, which will start at 1:30 o'clock Sunday morning.

For those who do not care to dance, there will be special midnight shows at the Capitol and Earle Theaters, with all the movie, stage and radio stars appearing at both theaters in turn. Among them will be Frederic March and his wife, Florence Eldredge; Janet Gaynor; Eleanor Powell and Ray Bolger, dancing stars of "Rosalie;" Tommy Kelley and Anne Gillis, juvenile stars of "Tom Sawyer;" Joe E. Brown, and Patricia Bowman, Washington girl who made good as a well-known ballerina. Ken Murray, screen and radio star, will act as master of ceremonies for the "Gold Plate" breakfast.

Society Plans
To Attend Show

Tomorrow society will turn out en masse for the first event of the celebration, the showing of the famous musical comedy, "Between the Devil," at the National Theater.

Mrs. Roosevelt will again take a leading role in the championship President's Birthday Celebration Horse Show at Fort Myer on February 1 and 2, under the auspices of a committee headed by Maj. Gen. Leon B. Kromer.

The funds this year will go toward the establishment of a new foundation, designed to conduct a Nation-wide battle against infantile paralysis.

Tickets for the ball, entitle the bearer to dance at any or all of the seven hotels. Elwood Seal, chairman of the ticket sales committee, has enlisted a group of Congressional girls, headed by Miss Catherine Harrison, daughter of Senator Pat Harrison, to take charge of sales in the department stores. Tickets to the ball will also be given as prizes at a duplicate bridge tournament to be held at the Shoreham Hotel Wednesday evening, January 26, by the Washington Bridge League. The tournament is open to the public and all proceeds will be given to the birthday entertainment fund.

The charge for the Gold Plate Breakfast at the Carlton will be $25 a plate.

By Jessie Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

"Isn't it nice that so many are out on such a bad day?" Such was the First Lady's comment as she greeted guests yesterday at the tea given for her by the Congressional Club. Several hundred members had turned out en masse and many had friends with them.

Mrs. Daniel A. Reed, of New York, president of the club, with the guest of honor, headed the receiving line. Introductions were made by Capt. Robert H. Williams, of the United States Marine Corps, naval aide at the White House. Mrs. Roosevelt wore a gown of dubonnet crepe, with orchid corsage and black hat. Mrs. Reed wore black velvet with shoulders of white chiffon embroidered in rhinestones and a black hat. Mrs. Otis S. Bland, next in line as first vice president, was in blue and silver, and Mrs. Harry L. Englebright wore black with a short tunic of a flowered print, combined with black. Others in the line wore all-black costumes. They were Mrs. John E. Rankin, Mrs. Joe L. Smith, Mrs. William Larrabee, Mrs. Richard M. Duncan, Mrs. Karl Stefan and Mrs. Ralph O. Brewster.

Mrs. John Nance Garner headed those who assisted in pouring. She also wore a frock of black figured with gay flowers. The center piece on the tea table was a bouquet of pink snapdragons.

Others who alternated in pouring were Mrs. William B. Bankhead, wife of the Speaker of the House; Mrs. Cordell Hull, wife of the Secretary of State; Representative Edith Nourse Rogers, Mrs. Bertrand H. Snell, Mrs. William Whittington, past president of the club, and Mrs. Dow Harter.

The Marine Band Orchestra played during the reception and, if the music was frequently drowned in the buzz of conversation, the red jackets gave a bright note of color to the scene. The room was decorated with palms, ferns on the mantel, and with the State flags.

Mrs. Malin Craig, wife of the chief of staff of the Army, was present as a guest of Mrs. Ewing Thomas, of Texas, and Mrs. Julian Schley, wife of Maj. Gen. Schley, was guest of Mrs. Bland. Among the other guests were Mrs. Ernest Lundeen, Mrs. John H. Overton and her daughter, Miss Ruth Overton, Mrs. Sherman Minton, Mrs. John Murdock, of Arizona, president of the 75th Club, accompanied by Mrs. May K. Anderson, of Phoenix, who is here visiting her daughter, Mrs. R. B. Evans. Mrs. Jerry O'Connell, who arrived from Montana yesterday morning, wore a frock of black and white with a little pillbox hat matching, with a long tassel.

Mrs. O'Connell and her husband, Representative O'Connell, motored from the West and were delayed in Beach, S. Dak., ten days by snow.

Miss Ruth Reed, daughter of the club president, had as her guest Mrs. Howard Mitchell, whose husband, first cellist with the National Symphony, opened the series of Friday afternoon programs at the club last season.

Mrs. Joseph Herbert, jr., was present, as were Mrs. Allard Gasque and her daughter, Mrs. Jack Hollowell; Mrs. Charles Colden, and Mrs. Thomas J. Ford, of California; Mrs. Paul Myron Linebarger, wearing an attractive green tweed cutfit. Mrs. Jed Johnson and Mrs. Will Rogers, of Oklahoma, the latter accompanied by Mrs. B. I. Newsom, who, with her husband, Col. Newsom, and their two sons, has just returned from Panama; Mrs. Herbert A. Rinard, wife of Maj. Rinard; Mrs. Eldon King, Mrs. James Craig Peacock, wearing a brown and gold lame dress and brown hat with veil; Mrs. Albert I. Lodwick, of New York City, who is a guest for several days of Mrs. Dow Harter; Mrs. J. Buell Snyder, Mrs. Roy Woodruff, who had as her guest Mrs. J. Frederick Richardson, of California, and Mrs. M. X. Sullivan.

Y. W. C. A. Club Gives Party at Decatur House

The quaint lamps which light the steps of historic Decatur House, flickered a welcome to guests in hoop skirts, feathers and uniforms of the colonial era last night as the Professional Writers' Club of the Y. W. C. A., through the courtesty of Mrs. Truxtun Beale, revived the history of the revered old landmark.

Mrs. Myrta Ethel Cawood, president of the club, greeted the members of the distinguished company as they arrived. The floors of the house, designed by Benjamin Henry Latrobe, creaked again under the tread of Commodore Stephen Decatur, great naval hero, an imposing figure in the person of Vincent Meakin, and his wife, Susan, impersonated by Miss Virginia Diedel.

Others of the same period were Thomas Jefferson, in the person of Edwin N. Goddard; Dolly Madison, Mrs. Walter W. Smith; Mrs. Richard Cutts, jr., Miss Mary Booton; Mrs. Daniel Webster, Miss Gertrude Steinhardt.

There were many others, among them Mrs. James Monroe, wife of the President, impersonated by Mrs. Elaine R. Stevenson, and Mr. and Mrs. Laurence Samuel Gouverneur, portrayed by Henry Lee Clark and Miss Nancy Heiskell.

The guests who came to life for the evening were by no means confined to the period in which Stephen Decatur lived, for after him, the masters of Decatur House continued to be leaders of their times and drew to it the men and women whose names have made history. There were Mrs. John Quincy Adams, impersonated by Miss Verna Mitchell, Baron Hyde de Neuville and Mme. de Neuville (Edwin F. Bicknell and Mrs. Sterling Bockoven); Mrs. Henry Clay, impersonated by Miss Marguerite Merigold, a collateral descendant of the statesman, and her daughter, Ann Clay Erwin, in the person of Miss Margaret O'Kelliher.

Abraham Lincoln was there, portrayed by Leland Sprinkle, and Francis G. Wells was resplendant as Sidi Soliman Mellimelni, Tunisian Minister, whose gorgeous jeweled costume attracted more attention than that of any other envoy.

In the period around 1850, there were among others, Col. and Mrs. Robert E. Lee (William T. Jarvis and Miss Margaret Nicolai); Judah P. Benjamin (Jacob Milwit), and Gen. Edward Fitzgerald Beale (Dana E. Barbour), in a scout costume, the disguise he wore on his expedition to California.

Gen. Ulysses S. Grant, with his cigar, was portrayed by William Drumm Johnston, who bore a striking resemblance to the general's picture. Mrs. Johnston was there as Mrs. Grant. Miss Katheryn M. Doherty represented Mme. George Bahkmeteff, wife of the last Imperial Russian Ambassador, and a sister of Truxtun Beale. Miss Doherty last night wore a gown of pink moire taffeta, trimmed in pearls and brilliant ornaments, which had been in the wardrobe of Mme. Bahkmeteff.

Mrs. Truxtun Beale, the present hostess of Decatur House, was the last of those introduced and represented the present. Senator Royal S. Copeland who, with Mrs. Copeland, was present, spoke briefly, telling of Decatur's heroism, urging the preservation of the landmark, and adding that "if this country had more of the spirit of Stephen Decatur today we should be a safer and happier nation."

Mrs. Carroll Miller, sister of Senator Guffey, also spoke, reviewing the history of the house and its line of distinguished owners and urging its preservation. When the Writers' Club inaugurated the movement to save it, Senator Guffey told Miss Cawood: "If you don't save it we will come down here and move it brick by brick to Pennsylvania, like we did the bones of Stephen Decatur."

The program also included music appropriate to the Colonial period, played on the harp by Miss Sylvia Meyer.

Barnard Club To Hold Session

Recession Will Be Topic of Symposium Set for Next Saturday.

Members of the Barnard College (Columbia University) Club of Washington next Saturday will hold the second luncheon symposium of the season on "This Recession: A Program for a Way Out."

David Cushman Coyle, engineer and economist, will speak. Recent winner of the Harper essay award on "The American Way," Coyle is consultant to the Senate Committee on Unemployment. The other speaker will be Franklyn Waltman, head of The Washington Post's National News Bureau.

The chairman of the meeting again will be Mrs. Eugene Meyer, Barnard alumnae. Mrs. David Barr, president, has announced that many prominent persons have been invited.

The luncheon will be held at 1:30 p. m. at 2400 Sixteenth street. The arrangements committee includes Miss Mildred Curran, Capt. Rhoda Milliken, Mrs. John Beach and Mrs. Bryan Batty.

Boycott on Japan Topic in Bethesda

The Newcomb Club of Bethesda, which was addressed by former Representative Jeanette Rankin at its luncheon at the Highlands yesterday, have a special meeting next Friday "to consider the club's position on the use of domestic cotton in preference to imported silk."

The question of the boycott was brought up following Miss Rankin's talk on peace, and she stated she was opposed to it because it would be likely to breed hatred of the Japanese here instead of serving as an effective means of halting Japan's invasion of China.

Among other guests of honor at ths luncheon were Mrs. Earnest Lundeen, Miss Emma Hays Heck, Mrs. John Gross and Mrs. John Werner. Mrs. A. B. Foster, the president, presided.

RECONDITIONED DOLLS—nearly 40 of them, dressed and ready to go to Children's Hospital, were guests of honor yesterday at the meeting of the Sunshine and Community Society, which held its monthly card party at the home of Mrs. Eugene Thompson. After the party they went to the hospital to cheer up the little patients.

Prizes for high score were Russian aprons, made by one of the members for the benefit, whose proceeds will help a family in which she is interested.

Mrs. Charles Bair, president, announced February 2 as the date of a party for patients of St. Elizabeth's Hospital.

MRS. EDGERTON PARSONS, second vice chairman of the commitee on the cause and cure of war, had other business in Washington than that of attending the conference—she was commissioned by her young daughter, a student at Bryn Mawr preparatory school, to visit the National Zoological Park and report whether there was really such a thing as a mouse deer.

She hired a taxi, drove out to the Zoo, saw the deer and thought her mission had been accomplished. But the taxi driver insisted that she see the "geeraff" before she returned to the hotel. So see it she did, and is now prepared to substantiate any claims which Nicky or anyone else may make for the Zoo's inhabitants.

War Cause Parley Ends Conference

Miss Josephine Schain Again Named Head of Organization.

The thirteenth annual Conference on the Cause and Cure of War was adjourned last night after recommendations had been adopted that "during the year 1938 member organizations lay major emphasis on the necessity of the co-operation of the United States with other nations to eliminate war and to establish and maintain peace and justice."

Adopted was the report of the study commission on national defense, which pointed out we must be "prepared to enter into progressive economic sanctions which involve economic measures and even the use of military force" if crises occurred.

Miss Josephine Schain again heads the committee on cause and cure of war as its chairman. Other officers named after the report of Miss Earlene White, chairman of the nominating committee, were: Dr. Emily Hickman, of New Brunswick, N. J.; Mrs. Harrison Thomas and Mrs. Edgerton Parsons, of New York; Dr. Esther Brunauer, of Washington, and Mrs. Fred J. Bennett, of Englewood, N. J., vice chairmen; Mrs. William Dick Sporborg, of New York, secretary, and Mrs. William Hill Pierce, of Philadelphia, treasurer.

Peaceful nations still have it in their power to make war a failure for those who resort to it in violation of our common pledges, Pierre De Lanux, director of the Paris Bureau of the League of Nations, told the conference last night.

"We still have economic weapons so powerful that by merely taking a negative attitude toward an aggressor, we could deprive him of the means of carrying on his war," he declared.

Miss Schain presided at the meeting, and Mrs. Harper Sibley, formerly of Washington, spoke on "War and Religion." The real battleground is on a level deeper than social or economic areas; it is in the field of philosophical and religious ideas, brought forth by the leaders of various countries, was her contention.

"Japan has built up emperor worship as the foundation for imperial conquest; Russia would not dare promote communism without the revealed religion of Karl Marx; in Italy, Mussolini has revived the religion of the Caesars, and in Germany it is not an accident that there has been an attack both against the Jews and the Christian church," she asserted.

Miss Louise Morley, daughter of Christopher Morley and a niece of Felix Morley, editor of The Washington Post, spoke in the afternoon on "The College Woman's View of the Peace Problem." Miss Morley, a student at Bryn Mawr, declared that "every student, if given time and opportunity, is ready and willing to co-operate in helping to eradicate the causes of war and solve the problems of peace."

Miss Earlene White, president of the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, presided at the session, at which Joseph Cadden, chairman of the organizing committee of the World Youth Congress, also spoke on "Youth's Stake in World Peace."

"Youth is the primary raw material of war," he asserted, "realizing its stake in world peace, youth works actively to make this contribution—a united generation, co-operating throughout the world to stop the use of force, to bring justice and liberty to all the peoples of the world through peaceful change."

Mrs. Lowdermilk To Talk on China

Delphian chapters of Washington and Arlington will meet for the second "Quarterly" session of the current season at 1 p. m., Monday, February 7, at the Martha Washington Seminary, 3640 Sixteenth street, northwest.

Mrs. Walter C. Lowdermilk, 4721 Colorado avenue, who has spent many years in the Far East, will speak on the Sino-Japanese situation. Tea will follow the meeting.

Valentine Ball Will Be Given For Thrift Shop

Committees Appointed for Annual Benefit on February 12.

A Valentine ball on Lincoln's birthday, February 12, at the Sulgrave Club, will be the benefit this season for the Thrift Shop. Plans for the party are already under way.

Washington's Thrift Shop—whose motto is "We turn your trash into cash"—divides its earnings each year among the five baby charities of the District—the Children's Country Convalescent Home, the Children's Hospital, the Child Welfare, the prenatal clinic at Columbia Hospital and the Junior League for its Children's Hospital fund.

Mrs. John R. Williams, president of the Thrift Shop, and Mrs. Reeve Lewis, chairman of its finance committee, presided at a meeting at the Sulgrave Club attended by the presidents and members of the five boards at which plans for the annual benefit were made and committees appointed.

Mrs. Frank C. Letts was named chairman of the patronness committee, to be assisted by Mrs. Henry Latrobe Roosevelt and Mrs. Lee P. Warren. Mrs. Richard Wilmer will have charge of the entertainment features, Mrs. Daniel C. Long, Mrs. Corcoran Thom, jr., Mrs. Richard R. Finkenstaedt and Miss Elizabeth Shouse assisting.

The supper committee is headed by Mrs. Henry Miller, Mrs. Thomas C. Claytor her chief assistant. Mrs. Carlos del Mar will have charge of the flower booth.

Miss Nancy Leiter, a member of the Children's Country Home board, heads the committee on games. She fits into her place by right of succession, both her grandmother, Mrs. John R. Williams, and her mother, Mrs. Joseph Leiter, were members of the original board.

Mrs. Kenna Elkins, acting president of the Children's Country Home board in the absence of Mrs. Philip O. Coffin, was among those present at the meeting. Also Mrs. William J. Fletcher, president of the Children's Hospital board of lady visitors, Mrs. Frederick H. Brooke having resigned when she was elected national president of the Girl Scouts; Mrs. Frederick DeC. Faust, president of the Child Welfare; Mrs. D. Lawrence Groner, president of the Columbia Hospital women's board, and Mrs. William North Sturtevant, president of the Junior League.

Sculpture to Enhance Apex Building's Beauty

Post Staff Photos.

1 The Capital's prestige as a city of beauty will climb a notch with the completion of the Apex Building at the head of the Federal triangle and the placing of two massive pieces of sculpture at the entrance facing Sixth street. The above pair of spirited horses is one of 492 models submitted by 246 artists who seek prestige by having their work chosen by the Treasury Department for the new structure.

2 Edward Bruce (left), general director of the painting and sculpture division of the Treasury Department, and Edward Rowan, superintendent of the section, are surrounded by models of statuary entered in the competition. Three of the Nation's leading sculptors will be judges. Each artist submits a pair of models, and a pair by the same artist will be chosen to avoid conflict of theme. Names of sculptors in the competition remain a secret until after the judging.

3 This reclining figure is another representative model. Approximately half of the models are of animals, including the American eagle, bison, lions and cats. The competition gives a struggling young sculptor without a name in the world of art an equal chance with the skilled sculptor whose works already grace museums. The Apex Building will be the home of the Federal Trade Commission.

The biggest photograph of President Roosevelt in Washington adorns a wall of J. F. T. O'Connor's moderne apartment at the Hotel Shoreham . . . It's about 4 feet by 3, right over the Comptroller of the Currency's desk, and seems destined to hang eventually in the office of the Governor of California.

Nothing the White House does seems to escape criticism in some quarter . . . I hear a few gentlefolk complaining because one of last week's big receptions occurred the evening the Philadelphia Symphony was in town, and some of the cash customers preferred to hear the free Marine Band music at the White House.

Maybe the orchestra could have come a day sooner?

* * * *

At a dinner party a few days before his appointment, Justice Stanley Reed hazarded the guess that Senator Schwellenbach, of Washington, would be named to the Supreme Court . . . Others present argued gallantly it would be Florence Allen—a rumor which swept the Capital like a squirt from a perfume gun.

"—competition for the musickers."

Two of the most imposing and personable gentlemen in Washington are John Taylor Thomas, the veterans' lobbyist, whose walking stick frightens timid Congressmen, and William Shearer, who has no objections to bigger and better navies . . . Both are tweedy, urbane and magnetic; I'd like to see them on opposite sides of an argument sometimes.

* * * *

* * * *

On a wager, a lady from an adjoining table in a night club here once approached Shearer and asked if he weren't Wallace Beery . . . Gallantly he admitted he was . . . Then when the loser of the wager reproached him, upon her insistence he admitted he was really George Bancroft . . . Actually, he's much handsomer than either; but he never contradicts a lady.

A Washington photographer tells me that, from his observation, it is better for a politician to be homely, bulbous-nosed, wrinkled, vulpine, asymmetrical of face, puff-cheeked, beetle-browed, lantern-jawed, pudgy, lanky, slovenly and ill-kempt than to risk the disfavor of the voters by any notable degree of masculine beauty.

* * * *

"We have to work harder," he says, "over what the voters send us here to photograph than any Hollywood cameraman has to work with a cross-eyed, freckled movie queen with one bad profile . . . The marvel seems to be that so many handsome candidates actually can survive the gauntlet of male suspiciousness and get elected."

"—the biggest photograph of all."

CAPITAL TYPES—1.

In quite a few years on the Hill, he has seldom read a bill clear through . . . He prefers to slouch comfortably in his seat on the floor and glean the essence of a measure from his colleagues' speeches. . . . The newspapers help him a lot, too; much of his philosophy of government is distilled from editorials and columns . . . He hates to prepare a speech, and budget statistics bore him to fatigue. Occasionally he is willing to make a speech, when someone writes it for him . . . But he is a lion in controversial debate, leaping to his feet to pour out a grandiloquent version of cracker-barrel statecraft . . . He feels he is too brilliant to plug away at the chores of legislation, but the impression has gradually got around that he is plain lazy.

"Which," asked the visitor, "have you chosen?"

Ickes Urges Conservation Cabinet Post

Move Inevitable, Session of Parks Workers Is Told.

Plans for Acquisition of New Areas Outlined by Cammerer.

"It is inevitable that in the end any logical and sensible government will establish a department of conservation," Secretary Ickes last night predicted before an audience of 300 at the banquet concluding the two-day conference on National Parks, sponsored by the American Planning and Civic Association.

Paying tribute to the personnel of the Park Service, Ickes remarked, "Some of you may have noticed an effort now being made to dig up something to the discredit of the service.

"Don't let it worry you. It takes more than one man to make an elephant out of a fly speck."

Long-Rrange Policy Set.

Ickes was introduced by Horace M. Albright, president of the American Planning and Civic Association and former director of the National Park Service, who described "the education" of the Secretary of Interior as "one of the biggest jobs for each director."

Outlining long-range policies of the National Park Service, Arno B. Cammerer, present director, said, "There has been a great deal of misapprehension as to the ultimate aims of the Park Service."

The service has no desire, he said, to substitute national parks for lands primarily valuable for agriculture, grazing, mining or power production. At the same time, these activities must be excluded from existing parks, he emphasized.

Parks Held "No Luxury."

"Park land must be primarily recreational and inspirational," he said.

Acquisitions the National Park Service hopes to make, according to Cammerer, include scenic stretches of ocean beaches, areas rich in animal and plant life, instructive geological formations, historic sites and trackless wilderness regions which are particularly valuable for "character and stamina-building."

"Such a program is not a luxury," he concluded. "It is a legitimate and thrifty investment in natural and human resources, interfering with no sphere of business or other Government agencies."

Other speakers on the banquet program included J. Herace McFarland, first president of the American Planning and Civic Association, and Frederic A. Delano, board chairman of the association.

Antiquities Looted.

Looting of archeological sites in the Southwest was deplored by Herbert Maier, regional director of the National Park Service, in an address at the afternoon session.

"While erosion and livestock contribute to the process of ruin and disintegration, the greatest damage is done by man," he told the parks conference at the Willard Hotel. He called the looting "a major outdoor sport that has been heartbreakingly extensive."

Another complaint, on a different subject, was lodged by David H. Madsen, supervisor of fish resources in the National Park Service. He assailed introduction in American streams of "nonnative and, in many cases, incompatible species of fish."

Thomas J. Allen, jr., also a regional director in the park service, warned against encroachment by "commercial interests desiring to take advantage of water power possibilities within the park and monument areas, and to put to other local uses the natural features which the parks are intended and created to preserve."

Wildlife Preservation.

A three-point program to insure the future of native wildlife in the parks was advanced by Joseph S. Dixon, National Park Service field naturalist:

1. Preserve and maintain an adequate pure native breeding stock of all species.

2. See that the animals have the plant and animal background conducive to their preservation.

3. Provide for expert technical supervision by trained men. The conference re-elected Horace M. Albright president, and Harold S. Buttenheim, first vice president, to the board of directors. Others elected to the board were James M. Langley, Concord, N. H.; Gilmore D. Clarke, Pelham, N. Y., chairman of the fine arts commission; Ben H. Kizer, Spokane, Wash., and Dr. Herman Bumpus, Waban, Mass.

Of shoes and ships and sealing wax

Nobody sang Lewis Carroll's nautical ditty at the dinner of the fishery advisory committee of the business advisory council for the Department of Commerce, but the food was fishy and the speeches salty.

Gardner Poole, toastmaster, presided over the dinner served in a fish-net draped dining room, where guests were served by waiters garbed in sou'westers.

Secretary Roper, honor guest, seriously urged the members of the advisory council "to do something about having more Fridays in the week." He also suggested that greater co-operation between fish canners and meat packers would help both industries.

Table decorations also emphasized the sea-going character of the guests, for each centerpiece was a fish bowl with a goldfish therein, and the speakers' table was decked with lighthouses which flickered off and on.

The feast began with "fish house punch" and proceeded leisurely through 21 hors d'oeuvres made of fish, without vegetables or meat.

Oysters and clams on the half shell, followed by hot clam broth and shrimp, crab and lobster a la Newburg, a main fish course, followed by "Marine Salad, Thousand Island Dressing," Spumoni Ice Cream a la Ice Socle Sea Shells, coffee and speeches, comprised the main de-appetizers.

The speeches concerned charting the course of the fishing industry, the value of statistics, laying the scientific foundations of oyster farming, the value of fish culture, canned fish—an excellent sea food, the approach to scientific fishery management, scientific management program to rejuvenate the shad industry.

After lunch the committee viewed demonstrations arranged at the University of Maryland by the Bureau of Fisheries on how controlled smoke replaces cave-man methods of smoking fish, the ultra-violet ray in killing bacteria, refrigeration—a great development in the fisheries industries, and the unexcelled food value of fish.

Sales Revenue More Expensive, Holds D. C. Committeeman.

By James D. Secrest.

A District income-tax law as contemplated by the House sub-committee on the District revenue bill will cost the average member of Congress only about $15, whereas a sales tax would cost them several times that amount, proponents of the income levy figured yesterday.

Representative Dirksen (Republican), of Illinois, chief sponsor of the income tax, said the bill will be designed so as to assess Congressmen's salaries only for that portion of the year that they live in Washington.

As the average Congressional session is only six months, he pointed out, the taxable gross salary will be $5,000 instead of $10,000.

May Be Below $10.

Primary exemptions of $2,500 for married persons and $400 or $500 for each child, when deducted from the $5,000, will leave around $1,500 or less for taxable purposes if the Congressman has two children.

While the rates of the proposed income tax have not been decided, 1 per cent has been suggested. If the usual exemptions that are in the Federal tax are included, the payment by the average Congressman may be cut to $10 or below.

"A sales tax, which has been suggested as a substitute for the income tax, might easily cost a member who stay at a local hotel and buys his meals, $5 a month," Dirksen estimated. "That would be for board and lodging only, and the tax on purchases of clothes or other goods might be much more."

Regardless of the $1,000,000 cut in the District budget, Dirksen said he will not drop his fight for the income tax. The sub-committee might adopt any one of several alternatives, he said.

Dirksen said the rates of all three taxes might be cut very low, but he indicated he favors the sharpest slash in the realty rate.

"It's ridiculous to impose a higher tax on overburdened home owners just to reach a few business houses or big apartment building owners," he added.

Predicts $50,000,000 Budget.

The Illinoisan emphasized that he was "not wedded to the business privilege tax," but that he was willing to continue it another year until an income taxe is firmly established.

"The District needs a permanent basis of taxation that can be expanded as the need arises," he said. "It won't be but a few years until the District has a $50,000,000 annual budget, regardless of what economies are made this year."

The Nichols sub-committee will meet again on Tuesday to decide what rates to propose for the income tax. The prospects of raising considerably more revenue than will be needed also will be discussed, it is indicated, but it is unlikely that a decision will be reached before the District appropriations bill is reported.

The Collins sub-committee will meet this morning to put the finishing touches on the District supply bill before reporting it to the House next Wednesday.

Chairman Collins expressed confidence that the $765,000 street lighting cost transfer will not be taken out of the highway fund by the House.

Five persons in a wedding party, including the prospective bride and groom, narrowly escaped tragedy yesterday afternoon when a trailer tore itself loose from a passing truck and crashed into their car on United States Highway No. 1, at Hunting Creek, just south of Alexandria.

The wedding car, proceeding toward Falls Church, Va., where the ceremony was to have taken place at 4:30 p. m., was forced into the icy waters of Hunting Creek.

Its occupants, all from Portsmouth, Va., were Paul E. Werz, 25, of 1104 Fifth street; his fiancee, Miss Elizabeth Skipwith, 20, of 188 Jackson avenue; the best man and matron of honor, Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Drennaman, of 211 Broad street, and Harvey A. Martin, of 1503 Mathews terrace. They were treated for slight cuts and bruises at Alexandria Hospital.

The truck and trailer, owned by Galliher & Huguely Lumber Co., of Washington, was driven by Hugo Stribling, 23, of Morrisville, Va.

As Miss Skipwith bewailed the soaking of her trousseau in Hunting Creek, Werz asserted that the wedding would proceed as soon as the party could get transportation to Falls Church.

"I didn't come up here for nothing," he said.

The couple was married at 6 p. m. in the rectory of St. James' Church, West Falls Church, by the Rev. Peter Schouten, assistant pastor.

Poundmaster and The Post Get Thanks as Man, Dog Reunite

William S. Busick, assistant superintendent of Emergency Hospital, yesterday expressed appreciation to Poundmaster Frank B. Marks and The Post for return of one of his valuable setter dogs lost two weeks ago.

He immediately went to the dog pound, where Robin responded to his call and jumped all over him to lick his greetings.

"I never was more amazed at anything than I was at the excellent care that was given my dog and all the others at the pound," Busick said.

His two dogs apparently went hunting about two weeks ago, he said. The puppy was found near the zoo in Rock Creek Park, several miles from Busick's Kensington home. The mother has not yet been found.

Wednesday Marks called The Post, saying that he had several dogs at the pound obviously from good homes and he would appreciate assistance in restoring them to their owners.

The Post printed one picture of three dogs, and before noon 30 to 40 other dogs owners besides the Busicks came to seek lost pets.

Job Loss Fear Of Waitresses Is Discounted

Fears that the District minimum-wage law might result in the displacement of women workers by men were discounted yesterday by Arthur L. Schoenthal, employe representative on the Minimum Wage Board, as the conference on hotel, restaurant and allied industries entered the second month of hearings.

Reading an excerpt from the fifth annual report of the Minimum Wage Board in December, 1922, Schoenthal declared that "the District of Columbia minimum-wage law has not resulted in the displacement of women workers by men. Opponents of minimum-wage legislation frequently argue that such a law, though it increases wages for certain groups of women, is harmful to the working women as a whole, because it throws women out of work and replaces them with men."

Fears Voiced to Board.

Waitresses, representatives of the employer groups and citizens have expressed the fear before the board that men would be given the jobs of women.

It was reasoned that should a minimum wage be ordered for waitresses similar to the $17 weekly scale passed for shopgirls, the employer would fire the girls and replace them with men. Men, of course, would not be subject to a minimum wage.

Schoenthal revealed figures of a survey made by the former Minimum Wage Board, and, over a period of four years, there was a two-tenths of 1 per cent increase in the number of women employed.

Mrs. Beatrice Schalet, representing the D. C. Co-operative League, asked that the board not consider tips as part of the guaranteed wage for waitresses. She urged that the cost and upkeep of uniforms be regarded as part of the restaurant's overhead which should be borne by the restaurant and not the waitress.

A third point made by Mrs. Schalet was that "girls not have $1 deducted from their wage for meals to be eaten at the restaurant at which they work, but that they be allowed full choice of where and at what cost to eat."

Sees Relief for Charges.

Representing the Christ Child Society, which places many girls in hotels and restaurants, Mrs. Grace Sheridan told the conference that "my girls will probably have to go on relief should a minimum wage be ordered which the proprietors won't be able to pay."

"If the wage set is too high, then the employers will be obliged to fire the inexperienced and inefficient," Mrs. Sheridan stated. "All of my girls, although they are willing to work, have no experience."

Miss Mavis Field, representing waitresses at the Raleigh Hotel, said her group was opposed to tips being part of the minimum wage.

Clark Griffith

50 Years in Baseball

By Shirley Povich

Chapter Seven.

HIS APPRENTICESHIP UNDER CHARLIE COMISKEY at St. Louis and Pop Anson at Chicago, two of baseball's most ebullient characters, served to make of Clark Griffith, himself, something of a fire-brand in those years before the turn of the century.

Comiskey was a chronic "kicker" against the umpires and, on many an afternoon, young Clark Griffith had watched the manager of the Browns intimidating an umpire so thoroughly that he had gained his point. When Griffith joined up with Anson's Colts in 1893, he discovered that Comiskey was, comparatively, a Milquetoast character. Anson was a veritable wildcat in his disputes with the umpires.

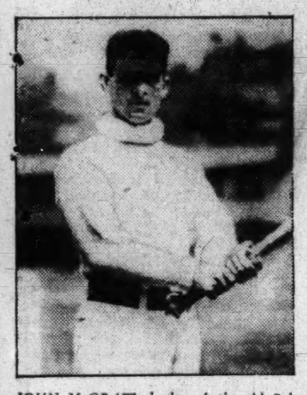
Big, powerful and overbearing, Anson never hesitated to vent his spleen on the arbiters. He operated on the theory that an umpire, sufficiently intimidated, would lean backward to favor the Colts on succeeding close decisions. The league's umpires in the 90's did not have either the actual or moral support from league officials that their later-day confreres enjoyed, and more often than not, it was the team which yelped the loudest and threatend the most which received the benefit of the close decisions.

Thus, in such environment, young Griffith blossomed as one of baseball's prime umpire-baiters. League annals are choked with incidents of Griffith's banishment from games by umpires who refused to countenance the abuse heaped upon them by the small but fiery right-hander.

Griffith Held Up As a "Rowdy" by Umpires.

THE CHICAGO RECORD-HERALD of May 20, 1898, eloquently attests to one particular tiff between Griffith and the umpires during a game at Chicago, where the Cubs were battling John McGraw's Baltimore Orioles. Said The Record-Herald:

"Clark Griffith bids fair to be the first man held up to the public as a rowdy under the new Brush law. Umpire Thomas Lynch has promised to make charges against Griffith. The charges will include the use of profane language on the ball field.



JOHN McGRAW, leader of the old Baltimore Orioles.

"Griffith was almost provoked into assault time and again. Lynch punished him by calling strikes wrong and Griffith lost his temper. While on the bench, Griffith asked Manager Burns to take him out, saying, 'That fellow is deliberately robbing me and I can't stand it. I will punch him in the nose.'"

Unfailingly, the clashes of the Chicagos and the Baltimore Orioles produced belligerent baseball and short tempers. No less than the Cubs were the Orioles renowned as umpire-baiters, with the fiery McGraw taking the leading role. In the musty files of the Chicago News of 1898 is the following dispatch from Baltimore:

"In every minute of play, the players fought and jawed and McGraw, chafing under defeat, almost incited the crowd to riot. He defied Umpire Swartwood, heaping abuse on him until the last man was out. Clark Griffith fell early in the battle, leading an assault on Swartwood, who retreated and called on police to protect him.

"With two strikes called on Sheckard, Griffith put the ball across the heart of the plate. Swartwood yelled 'one ball!' and Griffith fell flat on the grass, yelling 'Murder!' He was expelled from the game.

Origin of the Foul-Strike Rule.

"AFTER EJECTING GRIFFITH, Swartwood continued to give an exhibition of bad umpiring and cowardice. After putting McGraw out of the game in the eighth inning, he permitted McGraw to do as he pleased and the belligerent midget sat on the grass near the plate and abused the umpire to the end, defying him to carry out his order."

It had been an earlier outbreak of the Griffith-McGraw feud, back in 1894, that was responsible for one of the most far-reaching changes in the baseball rules . . . the foul strike.

The foul tip was not counted as a strike previous to 1895, but league officials took cognizance of that weakness in the rules following a game between the Anson's Colts and the Orioles at Baltimore. Griffith, pitching for the Chicagos that day, went into the ninth inning with a 5-4 lead and McGraw was at bat for the Orioles.

Throughout his career, Griffith had contempt for McGraw's ability as a batter despite the latter's renown. But he did recognize the ebullient Oriole third baseman as a smart, if not potent, hitter. When the ninth inning arrived, Griffith had little left of the speed he carried into the game and the canny McGraw knew that he could expect nothing except soft curve balls.

Thus fore-armed, McGraw succeeded in fouling off Griffith's pitches for five full minutes, knocking a score of fouls to all parts of the foul territory and thus sapping Griffith's strength. The Chicagos eventually won the game, but McGraw's performance opened the eyes of league officials to the unfairness of deliberate foul-hitting, and, the following season, the rule was changed to count all fouls as strikes until the third strike.

With the Cubs, in those eight years from 1893 to 1900, Clark Griffith won recognition as a star pitcher in an era that produced a wealth of pitching immortals. At a time when Cy Young, Amos Rusie, Cy Seymour, Jess Tannehill and other heroes of the pitching mound were winning fame, Griffith was keeping in step as is attested by his record with the Chicago team.

152 Victories and 92 Defeats With Chicago.

IN HIS FIRST FULL SEASON with Anson's colts (1894), Griffith took rank as a star, winning 20 games, while losing only 11. At the end of 1895, he was truly established as a leading pitcher of big league baseball, having won 25 games against 14 defeats that season. In 1896, he achieved even a better winning percentage with 23 victories and 11 defeats. Twenty-two victories in 1897, 25 again in 1898, and 22 in 1899 was Griffith's consistent showing of the next three years. A sore arm troubled him in 1900, but he won 14 games compared to 13 defeats, and rounded out a record of 152 victories and 92 defeats for a percentage of .623 with Chicago in the old National League.

Pitching epics were Griffith's duels on the mound with Amos Rusie, in particular. Unfailingly, Manager Anson started Griffith against the star of the New York Giants, and the 1-0, 2-1 and 3-2 battles between Griffith and Rusie comprise a brilliant chapter in baseball history.

The "Old Fox" became a by-word in baseball circles and a Griffith-pitched game was tantamount to a smartly pitched game. By every manner known to the pitching art, Griffith attempted . . . and successfully . . . to overcome his physical disadvantages.

The baseball writer of The Boston Post, in an eulogy of Griffith many years ago, wrote:

"We have seen him pitching for the old Chicago club and what a pesky individual he was to opponents, hostile crowds and umpires! All he seemed to have was a slow ball, a prayer and perfect control, yet he made monkeys of the men who faced him.

"He would stand in the box and procrastinate, while the fans yelled for his gore and the batter became fidgety with the strain of waiting for the pitch. Then, up would come the ball, tantalizingly slow, but never where the batter wanted it. The ball would be returned to Griffith by the catcher; there would be the protracted business of cleaning shoe-plates, fixing trousers, sneering at the batter and the ball would come floating up to the plate again, but never grooved.

"Griffith won more games with his head than with his arm. And if things did go wrong, Griff used to get after the umpires. He was a star baiter, a graduate of the old school, and probably holds the record for being chased out of ball games, eclipsing that of John McGraw, who was something of a genius in that line himself."

TOMORROW: Charley Zimmer, Huey Jennings and Griffith defy the magnates of the old National League, first step toward the formation of the American League.

Braddock Upsets Farr, Pounds Out Decision

The Washington Post Sports

16 WASHINGTON: SATURDAY, JANUARY 22, 1938 X*

Georgetown Defeats Pitt Five, 50-47

Hoyas Move Into First-Place Tie With Penn State; Play Tonight.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Pittsburgh, Jan. 21.—Georgetown outshot Pitt's defending Eastern Conference champions, 50-47, in a thriller that roared right down into the final seconds of play before the Hoyas were sure of victory here in fog-bound Pitt Stadium.

Some 1,800 fans threaded their way through the smog and rain to see two of the first-flight contenders for the 1938 conference crown tangle in a game that had blinding speed, furious defensive stands and everything that goes with a rip-snortin' ball game.

As the result of the victory, Georgetown moves into a tie for first place with the Penn State Lions, each showing two victories in as many starts, quite a jump for a team that shared the bottom position in the league with West Virginia last year.

Schmidt Scores.

Georgetown's attack functioned at top speed in both halves of play, as Schmidt set the pace in the first half with smart one-handed heaves from all angles, and Petroskey drove through for scores in the last half.

Miles Zeleznik, a smooth-working floorman, and Jack Scott, a big redhead, playing his first starting game, sparked the Panthers in the final rally that fell short by only the closest of margins. Zeleznik led the individual scorers with six field goals and three fouls for 15 points.

Freddy Messner's Hoyas showed a slight all-around edge throughout the first half of play. Schmidt started things rolling with a one-handed, off the floor shot from the side. Scott countered for Pitt to tie the score, but Schmidt raced right back to score on a pass from Murphy.

Dr. Carlson's second-stringers started the game as the first line rested on the sidelines from injuries suffered in a rough ball game here Wednesday when Notre Dame charged through to a 51-41 victory over the Panthers.

When Harry Bassin, who was later to do right well for the Hoyas in the wild, closing minutes of the game, dumped in a sleeper and Schmidt followed on a fast pass from this same Bassin guy, the senior regulars were showed into the game for the Panthers with the score standing at 11-5.

With Georgetown leading, 26 to 18, the Panthers staged a wild rally that had the Hoyas chasing from basket to basket much like startled deer trapped in a thicket. Capt. Johnson's short shot registered. Zeleznik took aim, on a pass from Johnson, and the lead was sliced to 26 to 22.

Then these same two gents teamed up on a flashy scoring act, with Johnson pushing in a "crip" shot. Scott got set from outside and the score stalled at 26 to 26. Then Scott found Spotovich open under the hoop and Pitt led for the first time, 28 to 26.

Hoyas Forge Ahead.

Johnson added a foul, but Franks struck back with a charity throw to bring the count to 29 to 27, Pitt. With time slowly running out, Kurtyka scored on an overhead heave, and Frank arched a one-hand push shot to put Georgetown out front, 31 to 29.

Senor Joe Garcia, sky-scraping Pitt center, was chased from the floor at this time as the game dribbled along into the final 10 minutes of play. Kurtyka took his time on a fling from the side and there was a five-point difference in the score.

Hoyas, Penn State Meet to Break Tie

Deadlocked in a first-place tie with Penn State in the strong Eastern Intercollegiate Basketball Conference, Georgetown's high scoring court machine moves into snow-bound State College, Pennsylvania, tonight to settle the issue.

Each club has registered two victories and has yet to suffer defeat. The Hoyas knocked the Pitt Panthers from the lead last night when they handed the Pitt team its first setback in a wild scoring orgy in the Smokey City.

Rialto Quits Fight Field

Backers End Attemps to Stage Shows.

Approximately $2,000 "in the red" and unable to compete successfully with the fistic firm of Turner & Ahearn, operators of the Rialto Fight Club last night decided to abandon the ill-fated project.

The club's last show, which featured Andre Jesserun against Tony Falco, drew only 380 paid admissions, and was the venture's finishing show. Joey Archibald, conqueror of Lou Gevinson, and "Biff" Lemieux topped the initial card, which caused only a mild stir among local fans. The promoter was obliged to dig down into his own purse to pay off the fighters.

Matchmaker Howard Livingston announced after the Jesserun-Falco fiasco that the Rialto would promote a show last Wednesday. Later he announced a postponement because of the club's inability to obtain the theater that night. He stated emphatically that the club would continue to operate and that it had sufficient financial support to absorb losses incurred in the first two shows. The support, however, was withdrawn, necessitating the club's closing.

Jim Braddock Exuberant, Farr Downcast After Fight

New York, Jan. 21 (AP).—They had Jim Braddock's dressing room ready for morgue duty tonight, but the "Cinderella man" of the ring came back to turn it into a hilarious, almost delirious, meeting place.

So excited following his thrilling triumph over Tonypandy's Tommy Farr that he couldn't speak for a few minutes, Braddock was almost mobbed as he burst into his dressing room. Foremost among the greeters was Joe DiMaggio, star young New York Yankee outfielder, who lost his poker face for once. Joe hugged and even kissed the exultant "Cinderella man" as cameras popped and cheers shook the clubrouse rafters.

"I won it myself, didn't I?" shouted Braddock. "Sure, I knew it was close but I still had enough steam to roll down that home stretch. Maybe they should call me 'Young Jim' Braddock after all. Farr is a good fighter and he can hit. (Jim looked at the some 20 abrasions on his left side.) But I won and I'm ready to fight anyone Gould says."

Joe Gould, his manager, whacked his fighter on the back and said: "We'll fight anybody, won't we, Babe?"

Jim Farley, Postmaster General, also was among those who jammed into Braddock's room for congratulations. He roared when Braddock plucked a painted horseshoe from his bag and kissed it.

"Jafsie Condon (intermediary in the Lindbergh kidnaping case) gave it to me just before the fight," explained Braddock. "This horseshoe was made by Jim Fitzsimmons in 1896 and it's been lucky ever since."

Over in Farr's room, all was dreary and a bit stormy. When he first entered, Farr shouted madly: "I was bloody well robbed," but his ghost writer, a fellow who challenged newspapermen to fisticuffs, shut Tommy up until just before he put on his overcoat and stalked madly—and heartbrokenly—out of the dressing room.

"I'm confused," he said. "Guess I'll quit fighting and go back to the mines. If I can't win a fight like that, why, it's no use fighting, I guess."

Only once did the heartbroken Farr, who acted like a man who had just had a fight with his wife, lose his temper. That's when he shoved a news photographer toward the exit.

"Get out of here or I'll punch you on the jaw," he yelled. He almost floored the photographer.

But when he finally left, Tommy said:

Pages Open Court Series at Y.M.C.A.

Senatorial dignity and Congressional pomp will be discarded in the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium this afternoon at 6 o'clock when House and Senate Pages oppose in the first of a three-game basketball series at 6 o'clock.

Sponsoring and seconding the Senate Pages into action will be Senator Bob Reynolds, of North Carolina, while Representative James P. McGranery will mastermind the House Pages.

Boasting athletes from many States, the rival factions have primed enthusiastically for this series and anticipate an abundance of action.

The Fight by Rounds

FIRST ROUND.

Braddock towered over his British opponent as they squared off for the first round. Their action was deliberate and the first two minutes of the fight was definitely a "feel out" period. Both men scored with lefts to the head before they went into a slugfest in the closing seconds of the round. Braddock appeared to have connected the hardest and brought over a good right to the side of Farr's face just before the bell.

SECOND ROUND.

They appeared to be fresh as they met in the center of the ring for the second round. Braddock got in the best blow of the early scrimmage, a right to Farr's face and then came up with a powerful uppercut that was the hardest blow of the fight to this stage. It shook Farr, but the Britisher came right back with a left and a right to Braddock's head. Both men appeared trying to outsmart each other, poking out their lefts in the closing stages of the round.

THIRD ROUND.

Farr lost round three for "heeling," using the back of his glove. Neither fighter took any punches that seemed to unsteady them. Braddock waited for Farr to come to him most of the time and had the edge in several flurries toward the middle of the session.

FOURTH ROUND.

The two men appeared to have changed styles in this session. Braddock, instead of slugging, stood back and let the Britisher come to him. Braddock tried to pick off his man as he came in. Farr got in some hard rights to the body, but Braddock continued to counter most of the invader's punches.

ROUND FIVE.

ROUND SIX.

ROUND SEVEN.

ROUND EIGHT.

Farr opened with a left to the body which just got under Jim's guard. Braddock cuffed Farr with lefts and rights to the face. Braddock pecked away at the Welshman's face with a left. Coming out of a clinch, Farr swung Braddock around. Farr landed two lefts to the head and took a stunning right to the face in return. Farr landed a powerful right to the face, but missed with a left to the body. Farr spun Braddock around with a hard right to the jaw. Farr scored several left and right hand smashes that made the former champion cover up. Braddock scored a left uppercut and fell into a clinch. They stood with their heads together and pelted away at each other. Farr emerged from the melee the master of the situation.

ROUND NINE.

ROUND TEN.

Deer Valley Snow Train Is Canceled

Because of warm weather and lack of a deep snow at the Pennsylvania resort, the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad announced last night that the second scheduled snow train will not leave the city for Deer Valley Park tomorrow.

Victory, Treasury Meet in Play-Off

Victory Post, winners of the first-half crown of the Community Center's Indoor Softball League, and Teasury, second-half champions, play the first of a three-game series to determine the league championship. The game will be played at 5 p. m. today.

Crowd Wild As Veteran Slugs Rival

By Alan Gould.
Associated Press Sports Editor

New York, Jan. 21.—Battle scarred Jim Braddock came from behind with a gallant finish tonight to upset expectations and beat tough Tommy Farr, British heavyweight champion, in a bristling ten-round match before a near-capacity crowd in Madison Square Garden.

The 32-year-old former heavyweight titleholder of the world, making his first start since being knocked out last June by Joe Louis, pulled the decision out of the fire after apparently being hopelessly battered and licked at the end of the eighth round.

Braddock's spectacular finish, in the ninth and tenth, not only turned the tide of battle abruptly and conclusively but thrilled a throng of 17,369 fans who paid $80,645.23 to see Jersey Jim stage a characteristic comeback.

Gives Away 7 Pounds.

Spotting his rugged rival an advantage in years and poundage, as well as an early margin on points, Braddock finished like a champion. There were no knockdowns, but it was a slam-bang bout, from the start to finish, and so closely fought that it took the last ounce of Braddock's courage to win the verdict.

On the Associated Press scorecard, each was credited with five rounds. The official verdict was 2 to 1 in Braddock's favor. Referee Johnny McAvoy and one of the judges, George Lecrow, decided for Braddock. The other judge, Charley Lynch, scored in Farr's favor.

Farr entered the ring a 3-to-1 favorite in the betting. The Briton, who had been mainly picked on the basis of going the 15-round limit with Champion Louis, also held the edge in weight, 207 to 199½.

Low Blow Costs Fight.

A penalty for hitting low, which deprived Farr automatically of the third round by Referee McAvoy's ruling, actually cost the Briton the decision. Tommy had a punching edge in this round, but was penalized for landing a left swing inches below the belt. But for this McAvoy, who scored four rounds for each fighter, with two even, would have been obliged to vote in Farr's favor. As it was the referee, exercising his discretion, decided Braddock's more impressive finish tipped the scales in Jim's behalf.

In addition to the third, Braddock was credited by this writer with taking the fourth, sixth, ninth and tenth. The other five rounds were scored for Farr.

"I knew it was close," said the beaming Braddock, as he was overwhelmed by well-wishers in his dressing room, "and, boy, I won those last two rounds by myself."

Postmaster General James Farley and Joe DiMaggio, the Yankees No. 1 holdout, and an ardent Braddock rooter, were in the throng that surrounded Braddock afterward.

Crowd Cheers Braddock.

Pro-Braddock from the moment he was introduced, the crowd went wild as the Jersey Irishman turned loose the rally that was as decisive as it was unexpected. With only two rounds to go, Braddock looked like a beaten man. He was always trying but he had been outroughed and outpunched. His left side looked like raw beefsteak from the effects of Farr's vicious swings. He was battered and tired. Ringsiders were shaking their heads and muttering something about "poor old Jim . . . good when he had it . . . but now all washed up."

Then from somewhere Braddock tapped a fresh source of speed and punching power. From a flat-footed stance he got on his toes. He moved in and out of range, circled his rival and began to find the range with both hands. Farr's previous mockery turned to surprise, then confusion. Tommy rushed in, with head lowered, only to be nailed by right uppercuts or left hooks. He was belted to the ropes by the fury of Braddock's counter-thrust, still swinging furiously but strictly on the receiving end.

Overconfidence Costly.

It seemed impossible for Braddock to sustain such a pace for another three minutes, but he did so, with a matchless exhibition of courage under pressure. Jim knew he had to take that last round decisively to have a chance. He didn't have much speed left, but he sailed into Farr, outpunched the Briton at every turn and was going so strong at the final bell that the referee had to pry them apart.

Farr's apparent overconfidence proved as costly as the penalty that cost him the third round. Faster, younger and stronger, the British champion had gained so commanding a lead on points, due to his effective body punching, that he seemed to feel he could coast through the finishing rounds. Like most everyone else, Farr underestimated Braddock's recuperative powers as well as his courage.

Jorge Brescia, 212, of the Argentine, won the decision from Jack McCarthy, 195½, of Boston, in a six-rounder waged after the main event. There were no knockdowns.

Bob Tow Wins.

Bob Tow, 207½, of Alexandria, Va., rallied to gain the decision over Eddie Hogan, 228½, of Waterbury, Conn., in the eight-round semi-final. Hogan won an early advantage on points, but lost the fourth round on a foul, was punched groggy in the fifth by Tow's well-directed rights, and outpointed in most of the remaining rounds. There were no knockdowns. The official verdict was divided, one judge voting a draw while the other judge and Referee Billy Cavanagh decided for Tow.

Stanley Hasrato, 183, of New York, got a decision over Bobby Milsap, 180, of Sacramento, Calif., in a six-round preliminary. Johnny Rossi, 160½, of Worcester, Mass., beat Emil Calcagni, 153½, of Elizabeth, N. J., in another six. The opening four-rounder was won by George Maselli, 199, of New York, from Dick Hogan, 190, of Boston.

C.U. Mittmen Open Tonight With Terrors

By Bob Garrison.

A band of Brookland boxers, including extractions from nine foreign countries, under the direction of a coach from Canada awaits the bell that will open Catholic University's 1938 boxing season tonight against Western Maryland in the Catholic University gym at 8:30 p. m.

From the center of interest, Leo Katalinas, terrific-punching 230-pound heavyweight, of Lithuanian descent, to the tall, gangling Rene Benitez, 135-pound Puerto Rican, the Cardinals will present a small League of Nations as Canuck Eddie La Fond's current offering to local fans who turn out for the inaugural.

Three months of conditioning (on the part of the team, of course) has placed La Fond in a perfect state of anxiety over the physical and mental state of his boys and he welcomes the opportunity to test them against the team that last week defeated Penn State, 5 to 3.

Terrors Tough.

Long a bed of national champions, Western Maryland is expected to offer stiff resistance to the Catholic University team that has the appearance of being a winner from the 115-pound Dave Bernstein, Jewish junior from Chicago, straight on down the line. Especial resistance is expected from the Green Terrors in the heavier classes.

In these bouts, Capt. Tony Ortenzi, 175-pounder, and Joe O'Leair, heavyweight, are featured. Ortenzi, who won on technical knockout over his Penn State opponent, probably possesses an edge in punch as well as experience over Catholic University's promising Jay Turner, local sophomore boy with an English name who will be fighting his first varsity foe.

Although only a 187-pounder O'Leair is gunning for Katalinas and his boxing skill may be just the thing to stop the Brookland boy. His height of 6 feet 3 inches enabled him to score a knockout last week at the expense of Nesmith, the Penn State heavy.

Greco Will fight.

The Cards will be seeking to catch up with Maryland, their next week's foe, who has already met its first test when it came out even with Duke's mittmen last week in a 4-4 tie.

115 pounds, Dave Bernstein (C. U.) vs. Odell Osteen (W. D.); 125 pounds, Francis (Tex) Guinan (C. U.) vs. Louis Norris (W. Md.); 135 pounds, Gene Benitez (C. U.) vs. Harold Martin (W. Md.); 145 pounds, Capt. Fred Mix (C. U.) vs. William Bender (W. Md.); 155 pounds, Salvatore Greco (C. U.) vs. Frank Shipley (W. Md.); 165 pounds, Fred Stant (C. U.) vs. Elwood Andrews (W. Md.); 175 pounds, Jim Turner (C. U.) vs. Capt. Tony Ortenzi (W. Md.); heavyweight, Leo Katalinas (C. U.) vs. Joe O'Leair (W. Md.).

Boston Bees Sign West.

Stubbs Bows After Setting Speedy Pace

Francesco Is Third as Finance Fails While Making '38 Debut.

Hialeah Park, Fla., Jan. 21. Brush Hook, the big stretch running gelding from Mrs. Payne Whitney's establishment, made his score read two victories in as many starts at the meeting when he easily captured top honors in the Jacksonville purse of 1 mile here today. The chestnut son of Sickle, now at the peak of his form, caught the feather-weighted Stubbs near the eighth pole and drew out to win by a length from the T. B. Martin veteran. John Hay Whitney's plodding Francesco was third, a length and a half behind.

Mrs. Emil Denemark's Finance, favorite for the Widener Challenge Cup in which he finished second to Columbiana and making his first start since mid-July, was nosed out of the picture after chasing Stubbs to the stretch. The Chicago gelding doubtlessly needed the race under his belt.

Brush Hook, ridden by husky Eddie Arcaro, was second choice to Stubbs, paying $6.30. He completed the eight furlongs in 1:37 2-5.

The field was reduced to five starters when Honey Cloud and Masker became late withdrawals, the formre due to developing a slight cough and the latter reportedly because of fever.

Stubbs, ever an exceptionally fast sprinter, had a mere 100 pounds on his back and performed according to Hoyle as far as he wanted to go. Arcaro began moving with Brush Hook around the last turn and his mount had plenty of time in which to wear down Stubbs in the front lane.

Kate Smith, a bang-up second in her recent debut, came back with a winning performance in the three furlong dash for maiden 2-year-olds that opened the card. The bay filly was backed down to $3.30 for $2 favoritism but she was extended to the limit to make the grade, coming from behind and beating the mildly backed Driverin by a half-length. Spin On, a bit slow to get started, finished with a rush, being nosed out of the place.

Martin Barton Wins.

Martin Barton, showing a sudden return to top form, ran a remarkable race to beat the platers in the seven-furlong second event. With Johnny Longden riding the veteran for his former employer, A. G. Tarn, the Sir Barton gelding spurted from a position far behind the leaders and got up to win by a length, paying 20 to 1. Highomar, under weak handling, headed Musical Jack for the place. The latter, close second choice to Highomar and second six times in a row prior to this effort, tossed off a wide lead after six furlongs.

A fine ride by Mike Sarno helped the game gelding Distract to stick it out and record a head victory over 9-year-old Ladfield in the third. Ferryboat was third, two lengths back. The latter and Crowning Glory were in difficulties in the final drive, while Patchpocket and Legenda were bumped out of contention on the backstretch. Distract made his own pace and outlasted Ladfield when that fellow made his stretch bid. The winner was a $6.90 choice.

Akehurst Gets Home.

Akehurst, at the remunerative odds of $19.70 for $2, showed the way home to eight other 3-year-olds in the fourth contest of 1 mile. The Medway Stable's colt and Lovick hooked up in a duel right after the break. Akehurst's daylight lead diminished to virtually nothing in the stretch but he held on tenaciously in the thrilling drive and outlasted Lovick by a head. Broad Vision, always in the first flight, was beaten two lengths for the place.

Another good-priced winner developed out of the running of the 7-furlong fifth race for 3-year-olds. Hi Cliff staged a stretch rally that saw him victorious by a half length over Posterity, with Drift Along third, three lengths away. Maeayres and the favored Aces Wild ran along with Posterity, weakening that gelding for the final drive when Hi Cliff loomed on the outside. The latter paid $19.30.

Absconder added to the list of surprises by winning the seventh race after a long, hard drive with the Improved Building Trades. With Apprentice Mora riding for all he was worth, Absconder wore down his rival to win by a head and pay $65.80. Asyouwere, beaten a length for the place, probably was best. She made up many lengths and ran into trouble in the stretch, then closed with a rush that was too late. Bain Marie, the favorite, flattened out after racing forwardly for six furlongs.

Peaceful, $16.60, scored by three lengths over Atonement 2d in the nightcap. Heartease was third.

Chicago, Jan. 21 (A.P.).—Carpenters began laying track today for the six-day bicycle race which will open January 30 at the Coliseum, birthplace of six-day bike racing in Chicago.

Among the riders signed are Gustav Kilian and Heinz Vopel, star racers who have swept aside all opposition for the past two years. The race will be under the auspices of the International Six-Day Bicycle Racing Association, a rival of the National Cycling Association, which has been promoting races at the Chicago stadium.

St. Augustine Ball Club Names Judy Manager

St. Augustine, Fla., Jan. 21 (A.P.). Lyle Judy, regular second baseman of the Trenton Club of the Eastern Shore League last season, was named today as playing manager of the St. Petersburg Club, of the Florida State League.

The announcement was made by Joseph Cambria, Baltimore, Md., who will back St. Agustine in the Class D circuit this summer. Judy succeeds Jerry Fitzgerald as playing manager of the local club.

Dear Al: Selections at Hialeah Park

I wonder if there is truth in the rumors drifting across the Nation? One has it that something is wrong with Seabiscuit and that he will not start in the Santa Anita Handicap. The boys at the track say that Seabiscuit hasn't been working of late. Another rumor has Time Supply on the shelf and out of the $100,000 added classic. The Santa Anita without Seabiscuit's drawing power would be only another race despite the huge purse and California would lose the spotlight to Florida and War Admiral's scheduled appearance. However, the absence of Seabiscuit would enhance the chances of other horses. The Greentree Stable has lost Jousting, a promising 2-year-old filly. She succumbed to fever contracted after her single racing effort here on opening day. Jockey Frank Kopel, who was injured when thrown against the fence at Pimlico last fall, may never ride again. Kopel's friends say that his back is paralyzed. A. H. Waterman, for whom Kopel rode with success, has signed Hilton "Rabbit" Dabson, the Maryland boy. Florida has a law which bars minors at race tracks and it is being rigidly enforced. Hialeah has installed two electric reducing cabinets for the use of the jockeys. The stewards have deemed the horse, Debate, unfit for racing and he cannot be entered until veterinarians pass on his condition. BILL.

First race—Blackthorn appears nicely placed in the day's opener and promises to do a lot of running. A set of brackets would not surprise me. Centennial and One Chance for the place and show awards.

Second race—Paracase has worked well and may crock down in this event. Dan Cupid has speed and should be a keen contender. Boggie has a good chance to make a money appearance.

Third race—Inscription has improved under the Florida sun and may take down the chief award in this rather open affair. Vitox and Berry Patch are fit as hands can make them and should be close in the final drive.

Fourth race—Fraidy Cat, despite that disappointing last, will win this with more intelligent handling. Manseo appears to have a slight edge on Terpsichore for the place money.

Fifth race—Sparta revealed excellent form last out in her first start since last summer and should come right back with another winning performance. Maeriel is improving. Palamede to take care of the others.

Sixth race—Catalysis and Polyata probably will battle it out for the main honors in this group. Both are at tops and are promised good handlers, the Woolford Farm entry probably will take the third money.

Seventh race—Mauritius has done well since shipping here and, although not a standout, has an excellent chance of getting home in front. Black Mischief and Jexreel for the other cash.

Best bet—Sparta.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—KATE SMITH, $3.30, $2.50, $2.20; DRIVER, IN, $23.00, $5.10; SPIN ON, $2.80.

KATE SMITH, away forwardly, went in nearest pursuit of HANDIBOY in the early running, appeared to stumble a few times in the opening quarter, but finished gamely to win going away. DRIVER, IN, well up from the start, closed steadily through the stretch and just lasted long enough to stave off SPIN ON. The latter dwelt at the start.

SECOND RACE—Seven furlongs (out of chute). Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from Bahr gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 2:30. Off 2:32. Winner, A. G. Two-dollar mutuels paid—MARTIN BARTON, $42.30, $11.50, $4.90; HIGHOMAR, $4.50, $2.90; MUSICAL JACK, $2.80.

MARTIN BARTON, outrun early, raced in improved form and gained steadily on the outside in the last three furlongs, wore the leaders down 40 yards out and won going away. HIGHOMAR moved up steadily on the inside after leaving the backstretch, but was laid on by JUDGE LEER after entering the stretch, but closed gamely when clear and outlasted MUSICAL JACK. The latter began fast, displayed high speed while saving ground, but faltered when it came to a drive.

THIRD RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from Bahr gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 3:00. Off 3:05½. Winner, G. T. Hanna's ch. g. (5), by Distraction—March Hare. Trained by L. A. Brusie. Value to winner, $700; second, $150; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 0:23 1-5, 0:46 3-5, 1:12.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—DISTRACT, $6.90, $3.30, $2.80; LADFIELD, $4.20, $3.30; FERRYBOAT, $5.70.

DISTRACT, quickest to begin, displayed high speed and raced MAYRO and SAUNDERSTOWN into defeat in the early running, saved ground entering the stretch and drew out, but then faltered and just lasted. LADFIELD, restrained off the pace and going extremely wide the entire trip, finished with a belated rush through the stretch and just failed to set up.

FOURTH RACE—One mile (out of chute). Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds. Start good from Bahr gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 3:30. Off 3:33½. Winner, Medway Stable's br. c. Two-dollar mutuels paid—AKEHURST, $19.70, $7.10, $5.10; LOVICK, $4.30, $4.00; BROAD VISION, $6.80.

AKEHURST, away fast, displayed the most speed in the early running while saving ground, held on tenaciously when challenged and outlasted LOVICK when the final test came. LOVICK, a forward contender from the start, moved up menacingly when straightened into the stretch, but then hung in the closing strides. BROAD VISION worked her way up steadily while slipping through on the inside, but could not overtake the leaders.

FIFTH RACE—Seven furlongs (out of chute). Purse, $1,100. For 3-year-olds. Start good from Bahr gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 4:00. Off 4:02. Winner, A. H. Fairbank's ch. c. Two-dollar mutuels paid—HI CLIFF, $19.30, $8.60, $6.40; POSTERITY, $5.70, $3.90; DRIFT ALONG, $3.70.

HI CLIFF, rated off the pace in the first five furlongs, improved his position gradually on the outside through the stretch, finished courageously under vigorous pressure and wore POSTERITY down in the last strides. POSTERITY set a fast pace, raced MAEAYRES and ACES WILD into submission in the early stages, assumed a brief lead through the stretch, but was unable to stave off the winner's bid. DRIFT ALONG, hustled back and lacked speed in the early running, came to the outside entering the stretch, bettered her position steadily and wore ACES WILD down.

SIXTH RACE—One mile (out of chute). Purse, $1,200; allowances. The Jacksonville. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from Bahr gate. Won handily; place driving. Went to post 4:29½. Off 4:30. Winner, Greentree Stable's ch. g. (5), by Sickle—Nedna. Trained by J. M. Gaver. Value to winner, $850; second, $200; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 0:23, 0:46 2-5, 1:10 4-5, 1:37 2-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—BRUSH HOOK, $6.30, $2.90, $2.40; STUBBS, $3.20, $2.40; FRANCESCO, $2.80.

BRUSH HOOK followed the pace under light restraint until well straightened into the stretch, moved up with determination on the outside when called upon, wore STUBBS down through the stretch and won with something to spare. STUBBS held his field safe for speed and set a rapid early pace while saving ground, but faltered in the stretch run. FRANCESCO, hard urged throughout, closed gamely on the outside and wore FINANCE down in the last stride.

SEVENTH RACE—One mile (out of chute). Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from Bahr gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 4:59. Off 5:00½. Winner, W. S. White Sox Produce 'Miracle Man.'

By Shirley Povich.

Baseball has already produced a 1938 sensation and if you're asking who he might be, why, he's Jackie Hayes, of the Chicago White Sox.

And if you're wondering just what kind of a feat Jackie Hayes has performed to merite the label of a sensation, why listen:

POVICH.

He walked into the office of Owner Lou Comiskey the other day, admitted that he had batted only .229 last season, and walked out with a salary raise.

Now those kind of batting figures — .229 — would normally call for a club-owner to kick up an awful fuss and hand out a salary cut that would be tantamount to an amputation. And perhaps that's what Mr. Comiskey had in mind when Hayes called upon him to discuss the business of the second baseman's 1938 contract.

But by the time Hayes was through slamming a raft of other 1937 figures at Comiskey, the club owner was ripe for a salary increase. Hayes riffled through the official American League averages and came up with these disclosures for Mr. Comiskey's benefit:

He had, despite his .229 batting average, driven in more runs than Washington's Cecil Travis who batted .344.

And he had driven in more runs than Comiskey's own Royal Nonesuch, Luke Appling, who was the batting champion of the league in 1936.

And he had driven in more runs than Buddy Lewis who batted .314 for Washington last season, or Sammy West who slugged at .328 for the St. Louis Browns.

And if that were not enough evidence of his worth to the White Sox, Second Baseman Hayes was able to tell Comiskey that "You'll notice I was second only to Charley Gehringer in the fielding averages of second basemen."

This fellow Hayes is not exactly a stranger to Washington fans. Clark Griffith brought him up to the Nats from the University of Alabama back in 1927 when Hayes chose between a medical career and professional baseball. Scout Joe Engel tabbed him as an infielder who would be a sensation "if he could hit a lick."

White Sox Eyed Him.

The Nats farmed Hayes out to the Birmingham club and he was with the team virtually throughout the 1937 season, but he couldn't break into the Southern Association lineup. When Griffith brought him to Washington for a tryout in the fall, and watched Hayes perform in infield practice, the Nats' owner gasped.

Hayes was the slickest-fielding rookie that had come to the Nats in years. He was a "glider" out there around second base, his play seemingly effortless. Griffith and Manager Bucky Harris used to stand in the dugout and marvel at the talents of the rookie. But Hayes had no chance to break into the Washington lineup. Washington had a pretty fair second baseman at the time—Mr. Bucky Harris.

But Washington never did send him back to the minors. Hayes never gave much evidence that he could hit, but those fielding qualities were not to be minimized. The Washington club kept him around for five years.

And then, in the winter of 1932, Griffith had a chance to obtain Carl Reynolds from the White Sox. Reynolds apparently fitted the Washington club's crying need for a powerful right-handed hitting outfielder. He offered the White Sox Pitchers Sam Jones and Irving Hadley for Reynolds. But the Chicago club turned that offer down.

The deal could be made, Manager Lou Fonseca said, if Jackie Hayes were thrown into the trade along with Jones and Hadley. It seems that Fonseca, too, was aware of the lad's fielding talents. The upshot of it was that the Nats sent Jones, Hadley and Hayes to the White Sox in exchange for Reynolds and Infielder Johnny Kerr.

Best at Double Plays.

Jackie Hayes has been the White Sox's regular second baseman ever since. Not since Eddie Collins had been performing in the Chicago infield did the White Sox get such smart protection around second base. Hayes blossomed as one of the outstanding double-play men in the circuit. (Joe Cronin still says Hayes is the best). And in 1936 he shocked Manager Jimmy Dykes by amassing a .312 batting average. Hitting at that rate, Hayes was no less than a sensation.

Ossie Bluege never was much shucks as a hitter, but for 12 years his fielding won him a regular berth with the Nats. Washington managers never did attempt to acquire a harder-hitting third baseman. If the hits Bluege succeeded in cutting off at third base were credited to his own batting average, he'd have been a .400-hitting outfielder.

Clark Griffith, when he was manager of the Nats for eight years, was willing to peg along with George McBride as his shortstop despite McBride's known weaknesses. And Everett Scott, who couldn't hit .300 in the Epworth League, held the shortstop job with the Red Sox and Yankees for a dozen years.

The shortstop post must have an attraction for weak hitters. Connie Mack's Joe Boley never struck any particular terror in the hearts of American League pitchers, but as long as he could go and get 'em in the field, Mack wasn't bothered about replacing him.

Moore, of Cards, Signs His Contract

St. Louis, Jan. 21 (AP).—Three members of the St. Louis Cardinals—Dizzy Dean, Joe Medwick and Johnny Mize—have rejected terms for the 1938 season, but not Terry Moore.

The fleet-footed outfielder came to the club's office today and signed his contract after a brief conference.

In addition, he agreed to go to the Cards' baseball school at Winter Haven, Fla., beginning February 21, in an effort to improve his batting. He has hit under .300 each of his three years with the team.

D. C. Given Golf Dates At Meeting

By Merrell W. Whittlesey.

Baltimore, Md., Jan. 21.—Washington was assured of the Maryland open golf tournament and was expected to receive the junior open mixed two ball and national amateur qualifying rounds for the 1938 season at the eighteenth annual meeting of the Maryland State Golf Association tonight at the Elkridge Country Club.

The State Association also decided to string along with the U. S. G. A., and play the stymie in it's 1938 tournaments. With the exception of the Rodgers Forge delegates, the vote was unanimous. Robert Stead, jr., of Chevy Chase made the motion that was later accepted.

The women's tournament was awarded to the Elkridge Country Club May 24th to 28th, dates for the remainder of the tournaments on the schedule including the amateur, junior, junior open, mixed two-ball, senior, father and son, open, open qualifying and amateur qualifying will be announced at a later date.

Three-Day Event.

The amateur championship was changed to a three-day event with 18-hole qualifying and play in flights of 16. It will be a three-day event instead of the previous four-day tournament that had qualifying over 36 holes and a 36 hole final. The tourney drew only 31 entries last year, but the new method of play is expected to outdraw any previous Maryland State amateur event.

John V. D. Tweedy, of the Elkridge Club, was installed as president to succeed the late Basil Wagner. Other officers installed were president, Harry P. Galligher, Baltimore Country Club; vice president of the Baltimore district, John M. Mackenzie, Hillendale Country Club; vice president in charge of the events, Edgar M. Lucas, Green Spring Valley; vice president of the Washington district, Martin R. West, of the Columbia Country Club; vice president of the Western Maryland district, Aldine Lakin, of the Fountainhead Country Club; vice president and treasurer, Francis M. Barker, Green Spring Valley Country Club; general council, Albert E. Steinman, Woodmont Country Club; secretary, Emmet Gary, Hillendale Country Club.

Bid for Amateur.

Bids for the Maryland State amateur were entered by the Rodgers Forge Club and the Rolling Road Club. The junior closed tournament was bid for by the Suburban Country Club. The senior tournament probably will go to the Green Spring Valley Club and the Father and Son event to the Hillendale Club. The junior open will go to an unnamed Washington club.

In another major change, the Maryland State Open won last year by Cliff Spencer, will be played at an early summer date, probably in July instead of October, the usual time. Bad weather marred the previous tournaments in the fall months, thus the change to a midsummer date. The executive committee at a meeting within the next two months will decide the dates and places of all tournaments with tonight's bids being recognized.

Vice president Galligher made a special plea to the golf committee and that at least 1,000 handicapped cards be secured by the organization instead of the total of 509 in 1937. Mr. Galligher said that every member of a club belonging to a State golf association should secure a handicap card to further one of the foremost link bodies in the United States.

New Events.

Edgar M. Lucas, in charge of the tournaments, also announced a new slate of events that will feature the annual State tournament card. Variety will be the theme of the tournaments with combination pro-amateur and handicap events on the card. Several other types of tournaments will be added when the entire slate is announced to increase the interest of the State golfers.

During the year 21 tournaments were run off by the State organization. The State amateur and junior were in Washington. With the new monthly events added to the card, the greatest year in the history of the 18-year-old organization is expected for 1938. Washington clubs will be protected by assistant tournament chairmen to be named at a later date. The change in the play of the amateur event and the date of the open were heralded by members of the organization.

DiMaggio Rejects Bid Of $25,000

By Paul Mickelson.

Associated Press Sports Writer

New York, Jan. 21.—Joe DiMaggio may yet make Colonel Jake Ruppert eat his own ultimatum that "never again will any man receive $80,000 a year just for, playing baseball."

At the early age of 23, with only two big league seasons behind him, Giuseppe shattered all records at the Colonel's Third Avenue Brewery today by receiving—and rejecting—a contract calling for $25,000 for his 1938 services with the world championship New York Yankees.

No player in baseball history, not even the great Babe Ruth, ever got off to a salary start like that. DiMaggio still has a long route to travel before he reaches the Babe's $80,000 top but you cannot ignore such early speed as he has shown. Moreover, Colonel Ruppert is so completely sold on his youthful home run hero's personality and poise that it wouldn't surpirse baseball writers if he relented with a $30,000 contract this year.

Likes DiMaggio.

How much the colonel likes DiMaggio was shown at today's huddle. After DiMaggio had walked out with a yard-wide blust on his face, the gay old colonel acted like a street urchin who had just been given a shiny, new toy. Baseball writers, accustomed to hearing the colonel blast his holdouts, were surprised at his reaction. They expected him to attack Joe as a fresh upstart who didn't know the value of money. Instead, he leaned back in his swivel chair, tucked his fingers in his vest and said:

"He's a great young fellow. As nice as you'd care to meet. No, we didn't get together. We talked about the contract for about five minutes, didn't get anywhere near each other, and then talked about fishing. He's quite a fisherman, that fellow. Easy to do business with, too. Quite a bit different from Ruth. Babe was pugnacious when it came to talk about contracts. DiMaggio is a complete gentleman."

Later, after he had revealed the $25,000 offer, the colonel was asked if he still stuck to his statement that no player ever again would get $80,000 a year.

Too Much Money.

"Maybe, no one ever will get $50,000 a year?" he was asked.

"Well, I don't know about that," he said.

Even if he gets the okay sign from his family in San Francisco to take the 25 grand, Joe will be the third highest paid player in Yankee history, Col. Ruppert revealed. Only Ruth and Gehrig, who got $36,000 last year, will have topped him.

But anyway you look at the fancy figure, Col. Ruppert is bound to profit. If DiMaggio signs for $30,000 or less, Ruppert will have a good argument for Gehrig such as: "DiMaggio isn't getting $36,000 and he did as well as you did last year." And on down the Yankee line, he can use Giuseppe as his model.

In all, the Colonel, an old man whose fortune is estimated to be between $70,000,000 and $200,000,000, had a great time for himself.

"He's still in Reno on that divorce business," offered Business Manager Ed Barrow.

"He should be easy to sign this time," laughed the Colonel. "If he's getting a divorce, he surely doesn't want to have much money. The more money he gets, the more the alimony, eh? Thank goodness, I'm a bachelor."

3 Brothers Holdouts.

San Francisco, Jan. 21 (AP).—Dissension of the DiMaggios became a unanimous family affair today. All three of the brothers are baseball holdouts.

Vince DiMaggio, outfielder of the Boston Bees, and oldest of the ball playing brothers, said today he was not satisfied with the contract he had received.

Brown and Wes Ferrell Top Diamond Stars in Golf Play

By the Associated Press.

Sarasota, Fla., Jan. 21.—Lloyd Brown and Wes Ferrell, a pair of pitchers, tied today for medal honors in the third annual baseball players championship golf tournament.

A third, Dizzy Dean, who said he had bet $1,000 against $20,000 he would win, didn't even qualify for the top flight.

Others who landed berths in the top eight for match play tomorrow and Sunday were Paul Waner, Pittsburgh; Gerald Walker, Chicago White Sox, and Watson Clark, formerly of Brooklyn, each with 153; Garland Braxton, of Indianapolis, 155, and Johnny Moore, Los Angeles, 159.

Third flight posts went to Butch Henline, unattached, 185; Bill Swift, Pittsburgh, 183; Dennis Galehouse, Cleveland, 190; J. J. White, Detroit, 170, and Heinie Manush, Brooklyn, 171. Bruce Campbell, of Cleveland, withdrew after shooting an opening 108.

Fights Among Working Press Enliven Braddock-Farr Card

In the second round of the second preliminary, a free-for-all fist fight broke out among newspapermen at the ringside. Two of the principals were Jimmy Powers, sports editor of the New York Daily News, and Ed Van Every, boxing writer of the New York Sun.

Several other writers and sitters nearby joined briefly in the melee, which was halted quickly by police and plainclothesmen. Cause of the fight was believed to be the result of differences of opinion regarding the conduct of the fight game in New York City.

When Powers returned to the ringside, he and Jack Miley, former columnist of the Daily News, became involved in another fist fight. Powers claimed Miley had slugged him in the opening exchange with Van Every.

The entire crowd was more interested in the scrapping among the scribes than in the second preliminary, in which Bobby Milsap, Negro middleweight from Sacramento, Calif., was boxing six rounds with Stanley Hasrato, of Yonkers, N. Y.

MIKE PALM, recently appointed Manhattan College athletic director, was a visitor in town Thursday . . . as was JOE BACH, Niagara University coach . . .

At least one college athlete doesn't have to worry about where his bread and butter is coming from when he leaves school . . . MARIO GREGARIO, Georgetown University basketball and baseball player, has been appointed to the staff of the new $235,000 Southeast Boys Club . . . It was some affair the former Western High athletes gave EDDIE DUVALL, who played basketball for the Riders, at the home of DICK SCHLEIGHER, Wednesday . . . SHORTY RHODES, LEE DUVALL, REDS REYNOLDS, BOB WEAVER, BOB GAMMAGE and HAPPY GRAY helped him celebrate his last party as a single man . . . He's getting married tonight . . . CHARLIE REYNOLDS, local fight referee, SID FISHEL, manager of GEORGE ABRAMS, and CHARLES FYFE, manager of the Washington Boys Club, were strange figures in basketball suits yesterday as they played with the Central Boys' Club instructors' team against Georgetown instructors in their annual game.

DICK NEWBY, chairman, has announced that there will be a renewal of the South Atlantic Inter-Scholastic swimming meet this year . . . It will be held in the Central High pool, February 26, after a lapse of four years . . . SID SILAS, former local professional boxer, is not the boxing coach at Western Maryland University, as believed by many persons . . . SID is seeking the job, however, and according to him, was promised it before the season started by Coach CHARLIE HAVENS, who then seemed to forget all about it . . .

The Gothamites and Harry Bassler, of Long Beach, came in with 68's to better par by three strokes and take a slim lead into tomorrow's second 18 holes.

Pressing close behind were Jimmy Thomson, of Shawnee-on-the-Delaware, Pa.; Horton Smith and John Bulla, of Chicago, and Johnny Revolta, of Evanston, Ill., all posted in the 69 bracket. Numbered in the 70 scorers was Henry Picard, Hershey, Pa.

Leaves in Temper.

Sharing attention with the par crackers was the abrupt withdrawal from the tournament of Sam Snead, of White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., Snead, obviously off his game, went up in smoke and left in a cloud of temper as he, Thomson and A. K. Bourne, Pasadena amateur sportsman, reached the twelfth green. He had used up 41 strokes, five over par, on the first nine, and was getting no better when he halted.

An hour later Snead was all regret.

"I'm terribly sorry. If I'd thought about it I wouldn't have done it," he drawled.

Fred Corcoran, P. G. A. tournament manager, said Snead had assured him he would play out the tournament schedule this winter.

Was a Favorite.

Craig Wood, of Rumson, N. J., shooting one of his best rounds in weeks, posted a 70 to round out the select group among the first of the field of 230 contestants to come in. Bing Crosby idled around the course in 83 and had as much fun out of the round as the gallery that trailed him.

Listed in the first group to hit in the par bracket were three strong contenders, Harold McSpaden, of Winchester, Mass.; Dick Metz, of Lake Forest, Ill., and Art Bell, of Pasadena.

D. C. Woman Golf Victor

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Palm Beach, Fla., Jan. 21.—Mrs. Merrill M. Lord, of Washington, D. C., won the women's championship of the Winter Golf League of Advertising Interests at the Palm Beach Golf Club today. She defeated Mrs. John H. Abeel, of New York, the defending champion, by 2 up and 1 to play in the 18-hole final.

The men's title went to Max B. Kasche, of Ridgewood, N. J., who vanquished Robert H. Landsdell, of Hackensack, N. J., by 1 up. Mr. Lord won in the title beaten eight class from Edward J. Barber, of New York, by 5 and 4.

Merrill M. Lord, of Washington, D. C., and his partner, H. W. Barnhardt, of New York, finished with a net score of 68 in the four-ball competition of the Winter Golf League of Advertising Interests at the Palm Beach Golf Club today. They went out in 34 and returned in a similar number of strokes.

This event was held in conjunction with the thirty-first annual championship of the league which was won today by Max B. Kasche, of Ridgewood, N. J., who defeated Robert H. Lansdell, of Hackensack, N. J., by one up in the 18-hole final.

John H. Abeel, of New York, and Richard F. Alley, of Philadelphia, bagged five birdies and an eagle to win the four-ball competition with 32-31—63.

Roosevelt 2d Team Defeats Jayvees

Danny Boothe, winner's center led the scorers with 8 points and a team mate, J. Miller, was next, with 6. Bill Brubaker was best for the losers with 4 markers.

Zimmerman's Mt. Blaze Wins Van Nuys Purse

Los Angeles, Jan. 21 (AP).—C. D. Zimmerman's Mr. Blaze, a 4-year-old, won the $1,500 Van Nuys Purse at Santa Anita Park, yesterday, by taking a lead as the field entered the last furlong.

Jockey Archie Gray gave Mr. Blaze a nice ride over the six furlongs to beat Nation's Taste of the Milky Way Farms. The son of Blazes was timed in 1:13.2 over a heavy track and paid $6.80, $3.60 and $2.60.

Red Sox Sign Troy, Deal.

Boston, Jan. 21 (U.P.).—Secretary Phil Troy, of the Boston Red Sox, announced tonight that Pitcher Teh Olson and Outfielder Lindsey Deal had signed their 1938 contracts.

Cunningham Runs Mile Race Tonight

New York, Jan. 21 (AP).—Glenn Cunningham runs his first indoor mile of the 1938 season tomorrow night in the feature event of the Grover Cleveland track and field games at the Seventh Regiment Armory.

The Kansas veteran, holder of the world indoor mile record, has confined his tune-up campaign to shorter races with the exception of the Sugar Bowl mile at New Orleans, which he won in 4:13.2. He fell in the Knights of Columbus 800-meter test but came back last week to win the 1,000-yard run at the 69th Regiment's games.

Reid Newest Claimant to Ring Title

By Lewis F. Atchison.

Al Reid, one half of Monday night's feature bout at the Arena, yesterday filed a counter-claim to Tony Dupre's bid for the District featherweight championship. Through his manager, Sammy Goldman, the New York scrapper also agreed to post a $500 forfeit in pursuit of being acclaimed the best man at his weight in town.

Dupre previously announced that he would request the commission to recognize him as D. C. champion on the strength of his recent victory over Lou Gevinson. Tony, moreover, intends to establish a permanent residence here, which would enhance his chances of gaining the title, inasmuch as all local titleholders must reside in the city.

Dupre, it is reported, will be under the wing of sleek-haired Gabe Menendez if he does locate here. Menendez has a working agreement with Al Le Febre, Dupre's manager, concerning all engagements in this city. Le Febre will continue to handle the Italian in foreign rings.

Meanwhile, Matchmaker Goldie Ahearn signed Werther Arcelli, a veteran campaigner, for an eight-rounder with Battling Burroughs. He replaces Harry Rubin, who was obliged to withdraw because of an injury. Arcelli will be a sterner test for Jimmy Erwin's protege, having disposed of Phil Furr, Sid Silas and Johnny Lucas in previous appearances here. He is undefeated at the arena. They will go eight rounds.

Reid's hat in the ring only serves to complicate the picture, inasmuch as Lou Gevinson and Baby Manuel also have applied for the regal chapeau. Dupre, however, appears to have first call on it by virtue of his victories over that pair, as well as over Joey Archibald and Armanda Sicilia.

Preliminary bouts signed yesterday will pit Mike Morton against Johnny Gilley, of New York, and El Brookman vs. Leroy Zinkham, of Baltimore. A third preliminary has been arranged involving Ivan Nedomatsky and Eddie Guerra, who will fight six rounds.

The District Boxing Commission yesterday acted to preclude all possibility of fighters appearing here overlooking a clause in their contracts which forbids them to fight six days before and after their bouts here. Violators of this rule invariably plead that they didn't read the rules.

Hereafter the clause will be stamped on the face of each contestant's contract in red ink, and fighters found guilty of violating the regulation will be penalized to the full extent of the commission's powers.

Blue Ridge Beats Wilson

Local Teachers Lose on Road Trip by 38-33.

New Windsor, Md., Jan. 21 (AP).—Although Charlie Clark ran wild and scored 16 points for the Wilson Teachers of Washington, D. C., the Blue Ridge College basketball team handed the visitors a beating here tonight, 38-33.

Western Tankmen Lose to McDonogh

Baltimore, Md., Jan. 21.—Placing first in six of eight events, McDonogh School swimmers today handed Western High School of Washington, a 41-to-25 setback in the Knights of Columbus Pool for their third victory in four meets this season.

Western led in two events—the 100-yard backstroke and the 150-yard medley relay. Grdy was the outstanding swimmer on the Capital team. He finished first in the backstroke event and helped defeat McDonogh in the medley relay.

50-yard free style—Won by Delahay (McDonogh); second, Lemly (Western); third, Fleming (Western). Time, 27 secs.

100-yard breast stroke—Won by Baugher (McDonogh); second, Cuniberdi (Western); third, Taney (Western). Time, 1:16 4-5.

200-yard free style—Won by W. Wolfe (McDonogh); second, Madden (Western); third, Donnelly (McDonogh). Time, 2:52 3-5.

100-yard back stroke—Won by Gray (Western); second, Gardner (McDonogh); third, Carr (McDonogh). Time, 1:18 2-5.

Wilson Drops Opening Tilt To Roosevelt

Riders Win, 30-27; 2,000 Fans See Twin Bill at Tech Gym.

Interhigh Standings.

	Won	Lost
Eastern	4	0
Western	2	1
Tech	2	1
Roosevelt	2	2
Wilson	0	3
Central	0	3

By Jack Munhall.

At exactly 9:25 o'clock last night Eastern all but seized Western's interhigh basketball championship in full view of some 2,000 spectators at Tech gym.

For at that hour chubby little Lee Lusby tossed in a free throw that gave the Lincoln Parkers an 18-14 victory over Western and first place in the series. The game was the second encounter of an exciting doubleheader which was opened as Roosevelt topped Wilson, 30-27.

The bargain bill, which attracted the largest throng of the scholastic season, also produced the two most thrilling and interesting contests of the series. The Roosevelt-Wilson affair, delegated to a preliminary role, stole the show by giving the fans the best brand of basketball and countless laughs, including a comical bit in which a Roosevelt player tossed in a field goal for Wilson at a crucial time.

The result of the 64 minutes of basketball merely bore out the growing opinion that Eastern has practically clinched its third title in four years.

Eastern Pressed.

But the Northeast five, decidedly off its best playing form, gave followers many uncomfortable moments before it staggered to its unimpressive triumph. Western, carrying the fight all the way, hopped off to an early lead and limited Eastern to a single basket in the opening period, leading 4-0 after the first 3 minutes. Tom Saylor scored the initial points for Western on a quick cut and fast shot and shortly after Irving Needle counted in the same fashion to boost the lead to 4-0.

Not until 7 minutes and 15 seconds had elapsed did Eastern find the hoop and it took a lengthy pot shot by "Soup" Hancock to register the score.

Eastern slowly reached the form that marked its easy victories over Wilson, Roosevelt and Tech, and with Lusby, Hancock and Lombardy tossing in set shots led 10-8 at the half and was never again behind though Western was always on the verge of taking the lead, and deadlocked the score at 10-10 early in the third period.

Custer Scores Twice.

Bob Custer sank two successive baskets to produce the tie, but Western couldn't press its advantage and immediately fell back as Lusby and Hancock both hit the net from near midcourt. Len Stanton, the Georgetowners' tall center, who did a great job of shackling Clint Quantrille, reduced the Eastern margin to 14 to 12, but at that point Lusby calmly flipped in a charity heave, which proved the winning point.

Neither team made a substitution. So close was the battle throughout that the coaches feared to make a change which might weaken their five.

Wilson Almost Wins.

Wilson came dangerously near its first interhigh basketball victory, but despite the fact that Al Miller, Roosevelt forward, handed them 2 points, weakened under a late Rough Rider drive. The Presidents, improving with each start, got the jump on Roosevelt, running up a 5-0 lead in the first quarter and was still in the van at halftime by a 9-6 margin.

In the third period with Louis West, George Zuras and Doyle Royal counting in rapid succession, Roosevelt grabbed the lead at 15-13 and never lost it although Wilson fought back to deadlock the count at 25-25 in the last stanza. It was in the first minute of that last quarter that Roosevelt apparently couldn't decide which basket to shoot at. Miller, a recent substitute, seized the ball and looked surprised as he dribbled unmolested down the floor to drop in a snowbird.

Wheat Drops With Fall in Export Sales

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Jan. 21.—Downturns of 1¾ cents a bushel maximum formed the net result of Chicago wheat dealings today, with the lowest prices reached prevailing at the last.

This represented a wheat market fall of nearly 5 cents from recent top figures touched about a week ago. Failure of European demand to develop was largely responsible, together with a few Kansas, Oklahoma and Texas reports of moisture.

Purchases of United States wheat today for overseas shipment totaled less than 200,000 bushels and next to no export busines whatever was done in Canadian wheat.

Despite transient early gains of 1⅜ cents, Chicago wheat futures closed ⅝ to 1⅜ cents under yesterday's finish; May, 94½@94⅝; July, 89⅜@89½. Corn unchanged to ⅜ cent up; May, 60¾@60⅞; July, 61¾. Oats, ¼ cent off, rye showing ½ to ¾ drop, and provisions unchanged to a setback of 2 cents.

Thomas J. Watson

1,600 to Attend I.B.M. Congress

Representatives of the Washington office of International Business Machines Corporation who will attend the company's world business congress to be held in New York City January 24 to 27 will include L. H. La Motte, Washington manager; H. C. King, M. D. Rayner, A. W. Bowie, jr., J. L. Schick, R. P. Billingsley, O. L. Waite, C. H. Tomkinson, H. J. McDonald, C. R. Thompson, L. S. Crandall, C. L. Sergersten, C. G. Allen, R. M. Hall, C. R. Green, L. D. Ellsworth, R. A. Ritter and J. P. Martin.

Approximately 1,600 representatives of the company and its affiliates from the United States, Canada, Europe, South America and Asia will be in attendance when its annual world business congress opens its first session at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, New York, on Monday. It will be the largest of these annual conventions, which were started in 1914, in the company's history.

"We have learned that competition and co-operation can go hand in hand, and that people of many nationalities and races can work together with the common objective of giving greater service to the industrial, financial and educational institutions of their respective countries," said Thomas J. Watson, president of the company and of the International Chamber of Commerce, who will preside at the congress.

U. S. Gold Purchases 1.5 Billion in Year

The Treasury announced yesterday that it bought $1,502,400,000 worth of gold and 312,205,100 ounces of silver last year. Of the gold purchases, $1,309,590,900 came from foreign countries. This movement of gold toward the United States, however, has been virtually halted in the last two months.

The silver purchases included 241,545,400 ounces of foreign silver, bought at the world price of 45 cents an ounce. A price of 77.57 cents an ounce was paid for 70,625,300 ounces of newly mined domestic silver and 50 cents was paid for a small amount of old silver held in this country. This year the Treasury has reduced to 64.64 cents the price for new domestic silver.

Farm Income Drop Figured At 20 Per Cent

Last Years Output was Excessive and Time for Sales Short.

New York, Jan. 21.—The prospect is that farm income in 1938 will be 20 per cent smaller than in 1937, according to the Alexander Hamilton Institute. Such an income will not provide support for much of a recovery in the value of factory output in view of the fact that the value index for December did not drop quite to the level of the estimated 1938 farm income.

At the same time, it is not impossible that some recovery will occur early in 1938 as in 1930, with the value index rising temporarily above the farm income level and then receding later in the year as a corrective movement. It seems more probable at the present time, however, that such a recovery movement will not develop but that, on the contrary, the value of factory output will continue to slump as in 1921, with any recovery being postponed until later in the year.

Such a trend is indicated by last year's excessive production and the need of more time for liquidating this surplus. The postponement of a recovery movement would be the more favorable development since it would permit the establishment of a firmer basis for an expansion.

Curb Is Steady In Slow Trading

New York, Jan. 21 (AP).—Curb market stocks ended up just about where they began today as traders yawned through the slowest session since the opening of 1938. Scores of issues closed unchanged. Such changes as were recorded generally were small. Losses slightly outnumbered gains.

Among the biggest upturns were a 1½ gain for Montgomery Ward "A" at 132½, and a 1⅜ spurt in Pittsburgh Plate Glass at 87⅜. Up fractions were McWilliams Dredging at 11, Pan-American Airways 17, and Wright Hargreaves 8. Down part of a point were American Cyanamid "B" at 24¾, Pennroad 2⅜, St. Regis Paper 3⅜, Sherwin Williams 87 and United Wallpaper 2¼.

Up a fraction in the mining sector were Lake Shore Mines at 53¾ and Newmont Mining at 65½, while a shade lower was Pioneer Gold at 2⅞. A bit lower among the oils were Gulf at 40½, International Petroleum 29⅞ and Pantepec 6⅛. Fractionally lower among utilities were Cities Service at 1⅞, Electric Bond & Share 8⅜ and Arkansas Natural Gas "A" at 3⅞.

Sales totaled 126,000 shares, the smallest since January 3, and compared with 140,000 Thursday.

24.6% Steel Common Held in Brokers' Names

New York, Jan. 21 (AP).—Of the 8,703,252 common shares of United States Steel Corporation outstanding at the close of 1937, 2,140,955 shares, or 24.6 per cent, were in brokers' names, contrasted with 2,246,164, or 25.81 per cent, held by brokers three months earlier, the company announced today.

Of 3,602,811 preferred shares outstanding at the year-end, 398,391 shares, or 11.06 per cent, were in brokers' names, against 407,631 shares, or 11.31, on September 30 last.

Stock Prices Lose Headway As Traders Realize Profits

By Frederick Gardner,
Associated Press Financial Writer.

New York, Jan. 21.—Rallying steam died down in today's stock market and leaders backed away fractions to 2 points generally. There were a few wider set-backs. Profit realizing appeared at the start and continued throughout, although volume never was sufficient to enliven the ticker tape. On scant sales, the principal steels and motors dipped substantially in the closing hour.

Steels were depressed somewhat by reports the international cartel had cut some prices abroad. Coppers were still under the influence of unsettled price conditions for the metal.

Some Rail Stocks Weak.

While individual rails developed weakness, prominent members of this group held fairly well. It was announced last week's freight loadings were up more than seasonally. Oils were bolstered by action of the Texas railroad commission in shutting down production in the State for the next six Sundays. Rubbers pushed up for a while on rumors the foreign control committee at London might order a decrease in exports.

Bonds and commodities offered little assistance to stocks. Wheat at Chicago was off ⅝ to 1⅜ cents a bushel. Corn was unchanged to up ⅜. Cotton was down 20 cents a bale to up 10 cents. The French franc was a backslider in the morning, but came back when the chamber of deputies gave the Chautemps cabinet a vote of confidence.

Automobile share holders seemingly were not particularly cheered by announcement that motor makers who met with the Chief Executive at the White House today were in hearty agreement with the President's principles regarding installment selling. It was realized the time-payment system has accounted for much of the motor buying in the past.

Prominent shares on the day's retreat were U. S. Steel, at 58¾; Bethlehem, 61⅝; Chrysler, 58¼; General Motors, 36; Anaconda, 33; Kennecott, 38; Westinghouse, 104; duPont, 116½; Loew's 49⅛; Union Pacific, 80¾; Nash-Kelvinator, 10⅜, and J. I. Case, 94⅜.

Nickel Plate issues suffered a belated nose-dive attributed to thoughts the road will have its hands full in meeting a large maturity this year. The common was off 3¾ at 14½ and the preferred toppled 6½ at 26¼.

Retaining portions of forenoon gains were U. S. Rubber at 30⅜, Glenn Martin, 20½; Crown Cork, 37¾; Standard Oil of N. J., 49⅞; Freeport Sulphur, 27½ and American Can, 81.

N. Y. City Borrows At Record Low Rate

New York, Jan. 21 (AP).—New York City today got a $22,500,000 loan maturing in 90 days to one year at a total interest cost of $44,004.89, described by Comptroller Joseph D. McGoldrick as probably the lowest borrowing rate in the city's history.

A syndicate headed by the Bank of Manhattan Co. was awarded the loan at interest rates of 0.25 per cent for $7,500,000 in special revenue bills due in 90 days, 0.28 per cent for $10,000,000 in bond anticipation notes due in 90 days, and 0.65 per cent for $5,000,000 in tax anticipation notes due in a year.

Most Bonds Lower.

Renewed pressure on the rail group tipped the scales toward lower prices in the bond market today. For a time the rail movement was a well-defined two-way affair with declines offset by brisk rallies. Near the close many of the gains disappeared and the Associated Press rail average declined .4 of a point to 65.1, a new low since November 23, 1933. The industrial average also dropped .4 and utilities had a small gain.

Early cross currents in the rail dealings were thought to reflect a general shifting of investment and trading positions, but the news background continued unfavorable. December returns so far indicated to analysts that class one carriers would show another heavy decrease in net operating income.

A few low yield corporate issues were marked up fractionally, but United States Governments retreated, closing 1-32 to 5-32 of a point lower.

Losses ran from 1 to around 5 points in Great Northern 4½s at 84, Nickel Plate 4½s at 46¼, Boston & Maine 4¾s at 32, Alleghany Corporation 5s, 1945, at 63, and Erie 5s, 1975, at 18.

Erie 6s, 1957, rose about 4 on a small transaction. Southern Railway issues improved fractionally.

Cuban and German loans made fair gains, and Japanese issues were mixed. The Polish group was lower and Rome 6½s dropped 2 points to 71.

Freight Traffic Gains in Week, Drops for Year

Loadings Rise 5.1% for Week but Are 16.6% Under Year Ago.

Loading of revenue freight for the week ended January 15 totaled 580,600 cars, the Association of American Railroads announced yesterday. This was a decrease of 115,435 cars or 16.6 per cent below the corresponding week in 1937 and a decrease of 281,861 cars or 32.7 per cent below the same week in 1930. Loading of revenue freight for the week of January 15 was an increase of 28,286 cars or 5.1 per cent above the preceding week.

Miscellaneous freight loading totaled 209,874 cars, an increase of 2,006 cars above the preceding week, but a decrease of 62,071 cars below the corresponding week in 1937.

Coal loading amounted to 131,350 cars, an increase of 20,863 cars above the preceding week, but a decrease of 29,828 cars below the corresponding week in 1937.

Grain Loading Rise.

Grain and grain products loading totaled 42,393 cars, an increase of 2,721 cars above the preceding week, and 10,911 cars above the corresponding week in 1937. In the Western District alone, grain and grain products loading for the week of January 15, totaled 26,874 cars, an increase of 1,594 cars above the preceding week, and an increase of 7,249 cars above the corresponding week in 1937.

Live stock loading amounted to 15,219 cars, an increase of 578 cars above the preceding week, but a decrease of 549 cars below the corresponding week in 1937. In the Western Districts alone, loading of live stock for the week of January 15, totaled 11,569 cars, an increase of 699 cars above the preceding week, but a decrease of 487 cars below the corresponding week in 1937.

Forest products loading totaled 25,871 cars, an increase of 1,645 cars above the preceding week, but a decrease of 5,898 cars below the corresponding week in 1937.

Brokers' Loans Drop $28,000,000 in Week

By the Associated Press.

The Federal Reserve Board reported yesterday that last week's loans to brokers and dealers on securities held by reporting member banks in New York City totaled $654,000,000. The week ended Wednesday and the total represented a decrease of $28,000,000 when compared with the previous week.

Loans for the corresponding week a year ago totaled $1,018,000,000.

World Output Of Rayon Sets All-Time Peak

New York, Jan. 21.—World production of rayon in 1937 broke all previous annual records according to the Textile Economics Bureau, today. Output last year aggregated 1,725,000,000 pounds against 1,305,000,000 in 1936 and 1,072,800,000 pounds in 1935. Japan again led the world in total output with the United States ranking second.

The United Staes produced 28 per cent of the world's filament yarn output but only 3 per cent of the total world staple fiber production. Japan continues to be the world's largest rayon producer with about 325,000,000 pounds of filiment yarn (29 per cent of the world total) and approximately 175,000,000 pounds of staple fiber. Substantial gains in staple fiber especially were also made by Germany and Italy during 1937.

New United States Record.

Despite business conditions prevailing during the closing months of 1937, production of rayon in the United States also broke all previous records last year. Filament rayon yarn production in this country during 1937 reached a new high total of 312,236,000 pounds, an increase of 12 per cent over the 1936 figure of 277,626,000 pounds. The viscose plus cuprammonium rayon yarn production at 238,191,000 pounds increased 11 per cent over its 1936 total, while the acetate rayon yarn production of 74,045,000 pounds was 18 per cent greater than in 1936. Production of rayon staple fiber at 20,100,000 pounds showed an increase of 63 per cent over the 1936 total of 12,300,000 pounds.

Excess Drops $20,0000,000

By the Associated Press.

Excess reserves of the Nation's banks declined in the week ended January 19, the first decrease since Christmas shopping temporarily pulled cash out of the bank, the Federal Reserve Board said yesterday.

The excess reserves, which constitute the banks' supplies of lendable money, decreased $20,000,000 to $1,370,000,000. Although Christmas money continued its return flow to the banks, this trend was offset by routine increases in Treasury deposits in Federal Reserve banks and in deposits of banks not members of the Federal Reserve System.

The decrease in excess reserves was not regarded, however, as being significant because in the previous week they reached the highest total in nearly a year. They remain ample to meet business needs.

Owen D. Young Heads N. Y. Reserve Bank

Owen D. Young was appointed chairman and Federal Reserve agent of the New York Federal Reserve Bank yesterday by the Federal Reserve Board. Young, who is also chairman of the General Electric Co., has been acting chairman of the bank for the last year.

Beardsley Ruml, of New York, succeeded Young as deputy chairman, and Edmund E. Day, of Ithaca, N. Y., was appointed a director of the bank.

$50,000,000 Bills Offered by Treasury

The Secretary of the Treasury gives notice that tenders are invited for Treasury bills to the amount of $50,000,000, or thereabouts. They will be 91-day bills, and will be sold on a discount basis to the highest bidders. Tenders will be received at the Federal Reserve banks or branches up to 2 p. m. on Monday. Tenders will not be received at the Treasury Department.

Boston Wool Market.

Boston, Jan. 21 (AP) (U. S. Dept. of Agriculture).—Quotations on a few grades of fleece wools were showing a weakening tendency today. Graded combing bright fleece wools were quoted mostly at 30 to 32 cents, in the grease, for three-eighths blood and at 30 to 31 cents, in the grease, for quarter blood. The weakness in Boston was a result of continued flatness of demand, further weakening in New Zealand and lower prices on wools offered from the Middle West. Country-packed three-eighths and quarter blood mixed-grade lots of average bright fleeces were being offered at around 28 cents, in the grease, delivered East, compared with around 30 cents asked until the last few days.

Peyton R. Evans Recommended For Reed's Post

Peyton Randolph Evans, general counsel of the Farm Credit Administration, was recommended to the Attorney General yesterday as successor to Stanley Reed, who vacated the post of Solicitor General to become a Supreme Court justice.

The Post learned that the recommendation went to the Attorney General "with ample support behind it." Evans is the first to be proposed.

In Two Administrations.

The FCA official has been favored by two Administrations of opposing faith. In 1927 the Hoover administration, casting about for a lawyer familiar with farm credit problems, found Evans, an Amherst (Va.), native and a Democrat. In July, 1935, the Roosevelt Administration made him general counsel of its Farm Credit Administration—chief legal officer of the world's largest financial institution for agriculture.

He filled the vacancy created by Scott W. Hovey, who joined a private legal staff in Chicago. For some time previously, Evans was general solicitor of the FCA, and was general counsel for the Federal Farm Loan Bureau prior to the establishment of the FCA.

Has Had Varied Career.

Evans spent four years in the School of Civil Engineering at Virginia Polytechnic Institute. After working as a civil engineer for the Virginia State Highway Commission and for railroads, he studied law at the University of Virginia. In the World War he won commendation for his service at the front.

At various times he has been counsel for railroads, a college, industrial concerns, insurance companies and banks. At the age of 23 he was elected to the Virginia General Assembly, serving two years. He is the author of several articles on legal matters.

Role in Education Of Adult Stresesd

The need for every adult citizen to play a part in the education of youth was emphasized by Dr. George Johnson, professor of education at Catholic University, before the Cosmopolitan Club.

Declaring democracy was under attack all over the world, Dr. Johnson compared it favorably with fascism naziism and communism, stating these "isms" meant that you simply wore a uniform to signify that you did as you were told.

3,000-Mile Tour With No Car Tags Terminates Here

Luck that carried a Wisconsin motorist more than 3,000 miles in this country and in Cuba without license tags ran out last night in Washington.

Harold Greutzinger, 31, of Racine, Wis., bought a new automobile last fall, he told police, and applied for his tags. Since Wisconsin law permits operation for ten days without tags, he drove about the Badger State and then his vacation came due. He started south, his car minus the tags which had not arrived.

Down to Miami he drove, through cities and towns and over hundreds of miles of highway patrolled by police of a dozen States. When he reached Florida he went on to Cuba, taking his car with him and driving it on the island. Then he came back to the United States and started North.

Last night Patrolman W. A. Diers, of First Precinct, saw his automobile parked at Sixth and E streets northwest, barren of tags. Patrolman Diers waited until Greutzinger showed up and took him down to the station.

There the Wisconsin man explained the situation and was permitted to go his way while police checked up on his explanation. The car was kept at the station.

U.S. Lacks Supplies, War Aide Asserts

New York, Jan. 21 (AP).—Louis A. Johnson, Assistant Secretary of War, at a banquet of the New York National Guard tonight said that 'in the event of war we do not feel certain that we could properly equip more than 300,000 men."

Rear Admiral C. H. Woodward, another speaker before the annual convention of the citizen soldiery, pleaded for a "'Navy second to none' for the purpose of our own security."

Johnson, World war artillery captain and former national commander of the American Legion, asserted that within 30 days of mobilization call, this country would be called upon to put into the field 500,000 men with necessary munitions and that within four months it must expect to have more than 1,000,000 men under arms.

Commission Drops Carrier Complaint

By the Associated Press.

The Maritime Commission announced the dismissal yesterday of complaints against Hampton Roads (Va.) terminal companies, brought by the Buxton Lines, Inc., a James River boat line, and the Hampton Roads Transportation Co., motor truck carrier.

The complainants objected to wharfage charges and free-time allowances of the Norfolk Tidewater Terminals, Inc., Lambert's Point Terminal Corporation, Southgate Norfolk Pier, Inc., and the Southern Railway Co., on river boat and motor truck traffic intercanged over these companies' piers with ocean carriers in foreign, interstate and intercoastal commerce.

Auto Makers Confer With President on Employment Stabilization

Underwood & Underwood.

Representatives of three leading automobile manufacturers yesterday conferred with President Roosevelt on a proposal submitted by him to stabilize employment in that industry. Also present were heads of various financing corporations associated with the auto makers. Left to right, Kent Keller, of Chrysler; Ernest Kanzler, president, Universal Credit Corporation; Edsel Ford, of Ford Motor Co.; John J. Shuman, president, General Motors Acceptance Corporation; Senator Prentiss Brown, of Michigan; B. E. Hutchinson, chairman finance committee, Chrysler Corporation; William F. Knudsen, president, General Motors; Henry Ittelson, president, Commercial Investment Trust; and A. D. Duncan, president, Commercial Credit Co.

Commissioners Ask Parley on Lunch Funds

WPA, Welfare, Budget and School Officials Are Invited.

The District Commissioners yesterday invited interested officials to meet with them Tuesday to discuss school lunch needs here.

On the basis of information supplied them the Commissioners will decide whether to ask Congress for a deficiency appropriation to finance free lunches for the remainder of the year.

The Citizens Permanent Committee, which was organized last fall, has food to last through Wednesday "and maybe through all of next week," Mrs. John Boyle, jr., chairman, said last night.

Approximately $35,000 is needed to continue the venture until the present school term is ended.

Otto J. Cass, WPA director for the District; Elwood Street, welfare director; Maj. Daniel Donovan, District auditor, and Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools, have been invited to attend Tuesday.

Rose Robison Cohen, meanwhile, director of the Children's Studio of Drama, has announced that proceeds from a program of three one-act plays by her pupils on January 29 at the Grafton Hotel will go to help the fund.

New Short Waves Defeat Colds With Concentrated Heat

By the Associated Press.

Boston, Jan. 21.—A quick and effective treatment for the common cold and sinus infections was announced tonight by the New England Medical Center.

This treatment is by a new type of short-wave machine which concentrates and directs the rays onto infected areas, and, through heat, destroys the infection.

Wider uses for the machine, perfected by Dr. E. Schliephake, of Germany, are envisioned by doctors, possibly even the destruction of tumors. But at the moment the evidence to substantiate such hopes has not been accumulated.

W. H. Pickering, Finder of Planet, Dies in Jamaica

Kingston, Jamaica, Jan. 21 (AP).—Advices received here today announced the death of Prof. William Henry Pickering, 80, Harvard University astronomer and author of numerous astronomical works, at Mandeville, Jamaica, last Sunday.

Established Observatory.

Prof. Pickering, a graduate of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, established an astronomical station for the Harvard Observatory at Mandeville in 1900. He re-established it in 1911 and converted it into a private observatory in 1925.

Upon becoming connected with the Harvard Observatory soon after his graduation from M. I. T., in 1879, Prof. Pickering led expeditions to observe eclipses.

In 1899 he discovered Phoebe, the ninth satellite of Saturn, and showed later why it revolved in a direction opposite to the others. Twenty years later he predicted the existence and gave the location of the ninth planet, Pluto.

PWA Opens Drive On Injunctions

Acting on the recent ruling of the United States Supreme Court, upholding the Public Works Administration's right to make "loans and grants" to municipalities for electric power and light plants, PWA attorneys have begun a campaign in the District Court and United States Court of Appeals to dissolve injunctions withholding the loans.

Several already have been dissolved, it was stated, and a calendar of the thirty cases still hanging fire has been made.

Four motions to end injunctions are scheduled to be heard today.

Mrs. Cluverius Rites.

Funeral services for Mrs. Hannah Cluverius, wife of Rear Admiral Wat T. Cluverius, commandant of the Fourth Naval District, Philadelphia, Pa., will be conducted at 10:45 a. m. Monday at Arlington Cemetery, by chaplain Robert D. Workman.

Church of England's Reunion With Nonconformists Urged

By the Associated Press.

London, Jan. 21.—A plan aimed at reuniting the state established Church of England with nonconforming sects, such as Baptists and Methodists, which broke away from it in the seventeenth century, was announced tonight.

The scheme, which was expected to cause keen controversy, envisages a church in which both Anglicans and nonconformists might "find themselves united without loss of what is specially valuable in their distinctive traditions."

It was drawn up by a joint conference of representatives of the Church of England and the Federal Council of Evangelical Free churches (representing Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians and others.)

Resolutions commending the plan to the attention of churchmen have been passed by both houses of the Convocation of Canterbury as well as the Free Church Council.

The proposal suggests priests and ministers in charge of congregations be known as "presbyters," that bishops who assent to union accept positions as bishops of the united church, and that presbyters of all uniting churches may be consecrated as bishops.

It further was proposed Anglicans should not insist upon adoption of the sign of the cross at baptism, the wearing of surplices and kneeling to receive communion.

Nonconformists in return should "let bygones be bygones" on the subject of episcopacy (government of the church by bishops), whose alleged abuses led them to dissent from the church, the scheme suggested.

A reunited church along the lines proposed would have an estimated membership of 7,000,000 persons.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Friday Morning Music Club presents Sade Styron and Isabel Hutson, duo-pianist; Lillie Clayton Garrett, contralto (Dorothy Radde Emery, accompanist), and a string ensemble composed of, Mary Park Clements, Grace Powell, Rose Maxwell Dickey, Lela Burt, Felen Foster, Anne Farquhar and Daisy Fickenscher.

Inclement weather lessened the usual attendance at the Friday Morning Music Club concert in Barker Hall yesterday, and damp air played unkindly tricks with the intonation of the strings in the Mary Park Clements Ensemble. Despite this handicap, the group gave a pleasant performance of a suite by Luigi Boccherini, a suite so unorthodox as to begin with a minuet, proceeding through a German dance, a slow movement, a second minuet and a seguidilla.

Were Boccherini's music not graceful, ingenious and engaging, one could better understand why this composer, exceedingly popular in the late eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries, is so consistently overlooked. His sad fate associates his name now with little more than his "celebrated minuet," whereas he wrote a large library of chamber music works. To Miss Clements one is grateful for the hearing of an opus rarely taken from the shelf.

It would be unkind to criticize the two-piano technique of Sade Styron and Isabel Hutson, who played Harold Bauer's arrangement of Bach's "Concerto in the Italian Style" and the Brahms variations on Haydn's "St. Antoni Chorale." No special intuitive sense was needed to understand that something of a distracting nature had interfered with a carefully prepared collaboration.

Mrs. Garrett, whose warm contralto voice is firmly controlled and artistically used, offered Legrenzi's "Che Fiero Costume," Saint-Saens' "La Cloche," Meta Schumann's "Thee" and a charming "Filippino Pastoral," by Edward C. Potter, in which the naivete and sentiment of the poem are clearly reflected in the music.

Thus far this season the Washington String Quartet had been conspicuous by its absence from the concert platform, possibly because its members have had their time well filled by work with the National Symphony Orchestra. One rejoiced last evening at the reappearance of the four young musicians who play with such an agreeable and smooth blending of tone and with so fine a consentience in interpretation that the temporary interruption of their work has had no deteriorating effect.

The precision of their attack, the neatness of their interchanges and the affability of their phrasing was at once manifest in the Mozart quartet, the third of the set dedicated to Haydn. This is one of Mozart's transitional compositions in which an increasing sobriety appears. The first two movements are lighthearted and gay with a romantic warmth in the emotional content, but the brusque beginning of the minuet suggests a serious preoccupation, and the finale, for all its vivacious pace, is tinged with melancholy.

Proceeding chronologically, the players next gave their attention to the second quartet of Borodin which they read with an eloquence that did justice to its poesy. Borodin never allowed the science of counterpoint to dampen his gusto, and when he invented a good tune he frankly enjoyed manipulating it. In his M major quartet there are a number of excellent melodies (one of them is responsible for the popularity of the nocturne movement) and they are all ingeniously handled.

As the concluding number of the program, Henry Waldo Warner's humorous "Pixy Aing" brought smiles to the faces of the auditors. There is more fun, however, in this five-movement suite; beneath the fantasy and the impressionistic depiction of fairy pranks there is a decided strain of mysticism.

Smith College Club presents Martha Graham and her Dance Group at the Rialto Theater. Program: American Lyric, Frontier, Celebration, American Provincials, Imperial Gesture, Satyric Festival Song, Tragic Holiday and Prelude to Action; music by Alex North, Louis Horst, Imre Weisshaus and Wallingford Riegger.

If the size of the audience that welcomed Martha Graham and her Dance Group at the Rialto Theater last night accurately represents the interest in the modern dance, that form of expression is receiving a recognition warranted to encourage its advocates. One has to say audience because no word has as yet been invented to describe a gathering of people whose attention is supposed to be concentrated in the two senses of sight and kinesthesia; the music is not to be heard but to be felt through the movements of the dancers.

The music critic therefore will merely remark that the compositions of Messrs. North, Horst, Weisshaus and Riegger are admirably fitted to their function of rhythmic stimulation. No lyric lines distract with an appeal of beauty and no harmonic richness seduces the ear. All is strictly utilitarian and the aesthetic elements are reduced to rudimentary suggestions. This is logically as it should be, since the modern dance returns to the primary purpose of externalizing inner impulses.

Miss Graham's eminence in her field would be obvious to even the most casual observer of the contemporary phases of dancing. The precision of her work, the evocative force of her patterns, and the energizing quality of her ideas are as manifest as the projection of her personality. Her 12 collaborators, supple and pliant in every muscle, are disciples worthy of their teacher.

None but a dance critic would be competent to discuss the technical and expressive details of the program. Of Miss Graham's solo dances I found most interesting her typification of the pioneer woman and her assumption of the Puritan fanaticism in "American Provincials." The most effective group dances were "Celebration" for the intensity of the emotional content, and "Prelude to Action" for the variety of rhythmic patterns applied upon the pedal-dhythm of the music.

Franklin Thorne To Head Langston

Franklin Thorne Thursday was named housing manager of Langston, the Government's $1,800,000 low-rent housing project for colored families at Benning road and Twenty-first street northeast.

Formal applications for dwellings there will be taken in the coming weeks and the project will be opened in April, according to Nathan Strauss, USHA administrator.

Thorne, a native of the District and graduate of New York University and Hampton Institute, was assistant management supervisor in the housing division of PWA and was in the management of low-rent projects for colored in Atlanta, Atlantic City, and Cleveland.

President Puts D. C. Housing Up to Congress

Method of Providing City's Share of Funds Must Be Found, He Says.

Legal barriers confronting the District's slum-clearance program may have to be removed by Congressional action, President Roosevelt indicated yesterday.

The President said Washington's need for low cost housing could be filled when Congress decides how the District should provide the 10 per cent share required before funds can be issued to it by the United States Housing Authority. President Roosevelt indicated that Congress should make an appropriation for the District's share.

According to John Ihlder, director of the Alley Dwelling Authority, the District's slum clearance program calls for expenditure of $7,000,000 over a two-year period. Under the United States Housing act, the allocation of this money can be made only by direction of the President.

Ihlder and Nathan Straus, head of the USHA, have held several conference on the problem of allocation of funds to the District, and their findings have been reported to the President.

Other District problems which President Roosevelt indicated will require action of Congress include provision of an adequate airport, and a memorial to Thomas Jefferson. President Roosevelt said he had given his views on these problems to members of Congress.

Rep. Smith and Delano Speak For Gravelly Point Airport

Development of a 500-acre close-in airport at Gravelly Point was advocated yesterday by Representative Howard W Smith of Alexandria, and Frederic A. Delano, chairman of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, in hearings before the House Public Buildings and Grounds Committee on the new Smith airport bill.

Meanwhile, it was learned that work is proceeding on construction of a new testing laboratory for the Bureau of Public Roads on land above the site of the proposed airport, and that Representative May, (Democrat), of Kentucky, had reintroduced the bill providing for development of Washington Airport, vetoed by President Roosevelt shortly after the last regular session.

At his press conference yesterday President Roosevelt again expressed belief that an adequate airport should be provided here. He previously had declared in favor of Gravelly Point.

Construction of the public roads laboratory will prevent re-location of the George Washington Memorial boulevard in accordance with plans prepared by Army engineers for development of Gravelly Point Airport, and opposition to the move was voiced immediately by officials of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics and the Aero Club of Washington.

John F. Victory, secretary of the National Advisory Committee, declared "the matter should be brought to attention of the Secretary of Agriculture and work stopped, because it conflicts with the policy of the President and needs of the city."

Alan Smythe, secretary of the Aero Club, said that the construction was a "direct affront to the President's program."

Testimony before the committee brought out that $4,746,000 would be needed to develop a suitable airport at Gravelly Point.

Chairman Delano of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission said he was "pretty well committed" in favor of an airport at Camp Springs, Md., as recommended last summer by the National Airport Commission. However, he emphasized that as second choice he favored Gravelly Point.

Harllee Branch, Second Assistant Postmaster General, charged with supervision of air mail, declared need for immediate provision of an airport here is becoming constantly more apparent and he was "sorry to say what everyone knows—that Washington Airport is one of which we all are ashamed."

Blood-Stained Clothes Shown Wright Jurors

By the Associated Press.

Los Angeles, Jan. 21.—Blood-stained garments, a pair of red velour drapes and two empty shells from the pistol that killed Mrs. Evelyn Wright and John Kimmel, were introduced into evidence today in the trial of Paul A. Wright for the slaying.

Wright shuddered visibly when his wife's two-piece black suit was held up in the silent courtroom. Mrs. J. E. McBride, mother of the slain woman, covered her face with her hands and wept.

Officer Harry Reed testified that he found the shells on the strings of the, open-topped piano in front of which Mrs. Wright and Kimmel were shot, in an attempt to refute the statement of Wright that he fired from the doorway as he entered the room.

"Did you ask Wright why he shot?" asked Prosecutor S. Ernest Roll.

"Yes," said Reed. "Wright said he caught his wife cheating on him, and said it was not the first time."

A.F.L. May Oust Lewis Unions Within Week

Expulsion Expected to Precede Attack on C. I. O. Finances.

By the Associated Press.

The American Federation of Labor executive council is expected to expel John L. Lewis' United Mine Workers and Sidney Hillman's Amalgamated Clothing Workers at its Miami meeting opening Monday. C. I. O. Refinery and Metal Mine unions may be ousted too.

The C. I. O. unions were suspended a year and a half ago. So long as they were technically A. F. L. members, however, the federation could not start what it now plans—a campaign to break the C. I. O. financially. The federation will try to "raid" its members.

A. F. L. leaders hope International Ladies Garment Workers Union will secede from the C. I. O. They also talked of adding to the boycotts against lumber and the thing turned out by C. I. O. unions. The C. I. O. says both boycotts have been unsuccessful.

WAT

Bob Burns Says—

Every time I go out I load my pockets with a pipe, tobacco, handkerchief, keys and some change. My wife says it makes me look lumpy and her argument is that women git along all right and they don't have no pockets at all. It kinda got me to wonderin' how in the world women get along without pockets.

Then the other day I saw an ad in the paper that said "Lost—Lady's pocketbook: contains hairpins, wristwatch, nail file, powderpuff, keys, mirror, check book, railway ticket, copy of "Gone With The Wind," scissors, cigarette case, rubber reducing garment, three pounds of steak and a potato masher."

BENNY His Little Dog Gone By J. Carver Pusey

Movie Version Of Nazis Gets Calm Reception

Two stanch New Englanders, who denounced the establishment of a Nazi camp in their native Southbury, Vt., stole the show from Herr Hitler and his goose-stepping battalions as the March of Time's highly controversial "Inside Nazi Germany—1938" was released publicly for the first time at Keith's Theater here last night.

The audiences burst into applause when a rugged Vermonter demanded in a town hall meeting that the propaganda institution of Fritz Kuhn, the American Nazi leader, be barred. The applause became almost thunderous when a ruddy little old lady, who remembered her forefathers wore continental blue in their fight for freedom, arose and said: "Keep Nazis out of Southbury. Keep them out of America."

Other than this outburst of emotion, the audiences accepted the picture with silent interest. There was no hissing or booing.

There was awe among the spectators as the huge Krupp plant at Essen was depicted making ready for war—with vast sheets of molten steel pressed between rollers, and immense blast furnaces running full tilt against a smoky German sky. There was a cosmopolitan shrug when the streets of Berlin, with their cheerful exterior were shown. Lips even smacked faintly when closeups were shown of the fine foods in Berlin's great restaurants.

Washingtonians were not greatly excited by the pictures of the German labor camps, where the youth of the Reich are made hardy for the game of war.

Tempting the audience to demonstration were the tens of thousands of marching Nazis of Nuremburg, the Propaganda Bureau, and Joseph Goebbels, "the fanatical little propaganda minister of Germany." Other scenes portrayed:

Child life in Germany, fleets of bombers over Berlin and Fritz Kuhn, former German machine-gunner and naturalized citizen, chief propagandist for the Nazis in America and leader of their movement.

Miss Andrus Gets Girls' School Post

The Board of Public Welfare yesterday announced that Miss Dorothy Andrus has been appointed acting assistant superintendent of the District Training School for Girls.

Miss Andrus has been connected with the occupational therapy division of the school. She will fill the post vacated yesterday when Mrs. Margaret Corridon returned to her regular position as matron of the D. C. Jail. Mrs. Corridon had been transferred to the school temporarily following the dismissal of Dr. Carrie Weaver Smith as superintendent last November. Dr. James Lewald, superintendent of the District Training School for the Feeble-Minded at Laurel, has been acting superintendent at the girls school.

Straight Shooter

Mrs. Lela Hall, of Strasburg, Mo., averaged more than 97 out of 100 hits every time she fired at a clay target from the 16-yard line in 1937. Her average was .9756.

Dr. Monroe, 69, Funeral Is Set This Morning

Arlington Dentist Was Leading Methodist and Former Minister.

Funeral services for Dr. Walter G. Monroe, 69, who died Thursday in Cherrydale, Va., will be held at 11 a. m. today at the Methodist Protestant Church, in Cherrydale. The Rev. Dr. Earl McCloskey, pastor, will officiate.

Born in Loudoun County, Va., he studied for the ministry at Randolph-Macon College and Anderson College, Va. He became a junior minister in the Virginia circuit but he resigned due to ailing health, and entered the Dental School of George Washington University where he received his degree in 1901. He practiced at Arlington, Va.

Dr. Monroe was selected for 15 consecutive years to the Baltimore conferences of the Methodist Protestant Church. He served for seven years as president of the Loundon County school board. He was a member of the Masonic Harmony Lodge, of the District of Columbia, and of the Columbia Lodge of Arlington, Va. Burial will be in Ebenezer, Loundon County.

Peery's Ex-Secretary Named to Censor Board

Richmond, Va., Jan. 21 (AP).—Col. Peter Saunders, who served as secretary to the Governor and secretary of the Commonwealth, successively, from 1924 to 1938, was sworn in today as a member of the State moving picture censorship board and elected chairman.

Col. Saunders, who submitted his resignation as secretary of the Commonwealth to former Gov. Peery last month, vacated his office in the capitol Tuesday.

Extension Sought For Dr. Bradfield

The District Commissioners yesterday asked the Budget Bureau for permission to extend for a year the services of Dr. J. Davis Bradfield, medical inspector in the District Health Department, whose retirement is slated for next month.

Dr. Bradfield, the Commissioners stated, has had many years of service in the field of smallpox prevention and treatment, and his retirement would be a blow to the department. His salary is $3,400 a year.

All Churches Warned Of Magazine Fraud

Police last night issued a warning to the pastors of all churches to be on the lookout for a man soliciting magazine subscriptions. The man has visited a score of churches, given a a hard luck story and asked for money for subscriptions. He gives no receipt and the magazines never appear, the police said.

Five Students Near End Of 100 Sleepless Hours

Athens, Ga., Jan. 21 (AP).—The University of Georgia's three girls and two boys yawned tonight toward their goal of 100 hours without sleep—and a good long nap starting tomorrow afternoon. They will complete their experiment for the psychology department at noon Saturday.

After yawning through classes, fighting the allurement of a quick "cat nap" while the professor talked, the quintet was reported "still awake and doing fine" tonight.

Duce Cites Spain To 'Doubters' of Italian Prowess

Milan, Italy, Jan. 21 (AP).—Premier Mussolini's newspaper Il Popolo d'Italia declared today that performance of Italian troops in the capture of Santander, Spain, last August was the answer to those doubting the military qualities of the Italian people.

The editorial, which informed sources ascribed to Il Duce himself, referred to an article by the French Gen. Maurice Duval in the Revue de Paris crediting Italians with having played the main role in capture of Santander from Spanish government troops.

Il Popolo d'Italia said:

"Friends and enemies in every latitude and longitude, we say to you—and the history of the past 25 years confirms it—that these (military) qualities are of the highest order and perchance you may come to find it out."

Five Suspects Held In $39,800 Holdup

Charleston, W. Va., Jan. 21 (AP).—Officers of the looted First National Bank of South Charleston yesterday viewed five men held for questioning, but whether any were recognized was not disclosed.

State police and Federal agents took with them Loyal Baker, 22, and Reginald Armond Furbee, 19, arrested last night near Clarksburg; Earl Saunders, arrested Wednesday night near Lewisburg, but who was not identified when first taken to the bank, and two brothers arrested today in Charleston by Kanawha County deputy sheriffs.
